grantees may be equally effective against remote grantees,³ subject to rules governing equities between the original parties, considered supra § 87.

In an action on a covenant, defendant may plead an attachment execution against plaintiff, which has been served on himself as garnishee, although such plea is neither in abatement nor in bar of the action, for the purpose of qualifying the judgment according to the facts.⁴

Estoppel or waiver may furnish valid defenses to suits to enforce a covenant,⁵ although such a defense may not successfully be interposed where the facts do not support the claim of estoppel⁶ or of waiver.⁷

Fraud and mistake. Fraud or false representations,⁸ or a mistake of fact,⁹ may constitute a valid defense to a suit for breach of covenant, although it has been held that the grantor cannot set up fraud as a defense without returning the consideration,¹⁰ and that a mistake in the description of the premises does not constitute a defense,¹¹ since the deed may be reformed and the mistake corrected in equity;¹² but it has also been held that where by mistake land was included in a deed which the grantor did not own, and which the grantee did not intend to buy, such fact was an equitable defense to an action for a breach of the covenant of warranty in the deed.¹³

§ 119. — Other Breaches

The covenantee's acquiescence in other breaches of covenant may, under some circumstances, serve as a valid defense where the other breaches related to the same covenant as that sued on, but not where the other breaches related to different and distinct covenants.

Long continued abandonment or acquiescence in violation of a restrictive covenant may forfeit the right of relief for defendant's breach thereof.¹⁴ Plaintiff's failure to object to violations of covenants by persons other than defendant will not necessarily preclude his obtaining relief for defendant's violation,¹⁵ although where a covenantee knowingly permits others so to violate restrictive covenants as, in effect, to abrogate the purpose of the restrictions and to alter the general scheme originally contemplated, he may thereby lose his right to relief against defendant.¹⁶ The breach of another distinct and independent covenant in the same agreement is no defense to an action for breach of covenant,¹⁷ and the right to enforce one covenant is not affected by acquiescence in the violation of another and distinct covenant.¹⁸ The mere existence of a right to recover nominal damages on a covenant against encumbrances does not prevent a recovery of substantial damage on the covenant of warranty, where there is a subsequent eviction.¹⁹

§ 120. — Want or Failure of Consideration

Want of or failure of consideration for a conveyance or other instrument may or may not afford a defense to suit for relief for breach of a covenant therein, in accordance with the circumstances involved and the law of the jurisdiction wherein the action is brought.

Independently of statute, it has generally been held that want or failure of, or fraud in the consideration of, an instrument is no defense to an action on a covenant contained therein,²⁰ although there is some authority to the contrary,²¹ and it has been held that one merely holding the legal title to land who conveys it without consideration to the beneficial owner at the latter's direction is not liable on the covenant against encumbrances for failure to pay an encumbrance on the land assumed by the beneficial owner in the transaction by which he acquired the beneficial ownership.²² It has also been held that while natural love and affection between near relatives is a sufficient consideration to support a deed, it will not render obligatory a mere covenant or promise.²³ Where there has been collusion between the grantor and the grantee, as where land is conveyed without consideration, for the purpose of enabling the grantee to establish adverse possession under color of title, both parties knowing that the grantor had no title, there can be no recovery on the covenants in the deed.²⁴ Where the statute provides that the measure of damages in an action for breach of warranty shall be the consideration received by the grantor, no recovery can be had for a breach of warranty in a voluntary conveyance.²⁵ It has been held that a mutual building restriction covenant between lot owners has sufficient consideration to support an action for its breach.²⁶

§ 121. Jurisdiction and Venue

At common law, an action brought by a remote grantee for breach of a covenant running with the land should be laid in the county where the land lies, although under statutes abolishing the distinction between local and transitory actions it may be brought in a different county or jurisdiction, as where the covenant was made.

At common law, as between the original parties to a conveyance, an action for breach of the covenants founded on privity of contract is transitory;²⁷ but where the action is brought by a remote grantee on a real covenant, it being then based on privity of estate, the action must be brought in the county where the land lies,²⁸ except where by statute the common-law distinctions between local and transitory actions no longer exist, and the law where the contract, or covenant, was made may be applied.²⁹

§ 122. Time to Sue and Limitations

A covenantee's suit on the covenant is premature if brought before breach, and such suit should be brought within such time after breach as may be limited by statute, or in any event without unreasonable delay.

A covenantee may not sue for damages until there has been a breach of the covenant,³⁰ as by eviction breaching a covenant of warranty or other particular breach of a particular covenant, as considered supra §§ 87-113, although his right of action arises immediately on breach of the covenant,³¹ as shown in connection with limitations

a. Parties Plaintiff

Whether persons entitled to maintain an action on a covenant may be joined as parties plaintiff depends on the nature of their interest; when such interest is several, they need not be joined, but when it is joint, the action must be joint. Failure to show legal excuse for nonjoinder is fatal.

The question as to who may or must sue for breach of a personal covenant is discussed in § 35 supra, and as to who may or must sue for breach of a real covenant, in §§ 80-85 supra.

Joinder of plaintiffs. The propriety of the joinder or the nonjoinder of parties plaintiff in an action for breach of covenant is to be ascertained from the nature of the interest of the persons entitled to maintain the action.³⁷ If the interest of the parties suing for breach of covenant is several, the action may be several;³⁸ if joint, it must be joint;³⁹ and the terms or language of the covenant do not control this principle.⁴⁰ The fact that one of several joint covenantees did not execute the instru-

Heirs or devisees of grantee may maintain a joint action on a covenant of warranty.—Crisfield v. Storr, 36 Md. 129, 11 Am.R. 480—15 C.J. p 1301 note 28 [d].

Effect of nonjoinder

Purchaser, seeking to recover from vendor for breach of warranty against encumbrances amount which purchaser had paid to satisfy judgment which was encumbrance against premises, by admitting receipt of certain sum from title insurer and by failing to join insurer as coplaintiff, waived right to recover from vendor amount obtained from insurer.—De Carl v. O'Brien, 41 P.2d 411, 150 Or. 35, 97 A.L.R. 693.

40. Me.—Mitchell v. Kendall, 45 Me. 234.

Distinct duties

If the covenant is, joint in its terms yet runs to each of the covenantees as a certain and distinct duty to each, the covenant is several and they have each a separate cause of action and they need not join in a suit for a breach thereof.—Ford v. Bronaugh, 11 B.Mon., Ky., 14.

ment is immaterial,⁴¹ and it is not necessary that all of the parties should be named in the instrument, it being sufficient that they are so described therein that they can be identified.⁴²

Excuse for failure to join. If there is any legal ground for omitting the name of one of the covenantees, it is necessary to show such excuse for his nonjoinder, otherwise the omission is fatal.⁴³

Failure of remote grantee to bring in immediate grantee does not prevent the parties from litigating a controversy not concerning such immediate grantee.⁴⁴

b. Parties Defendant

Unless statutes otherwise provide, persons jointly liable on the covenant must be made parties defendant; but persons severally liable may not be joined as parties defendant. Where the liability is joint and several, the action may be against one or all of the parties liable. On the death of a joint obligor the survivor only is a proper party defendant.

The persons who are liable on personal covenants are discussed in § 36 supra, and the persons who are liable on real covenants are discussed in § 86 supra while the liability of heirs on the covenants of an intestate relating to land is treated in the C.J.S. title Descent and Distribution § 126, also 15 C.J. p 1262 note 51—p 1263 note 58, and 18 C.J. p 950 note 41—p 951 note 60, and of devisees on covenants of the testator relating to land, in the C. 46. In North Carolina

Under Rev.St. c 31 § 89, providing that, in all cases of joint obligations or assumptions of copartners or others, suits may be brought against the whole or any one or more of the persons making such obligations, assumptions, or agreements, the term "agreements" includes covenants, so that an action for breach of cove-

Joinder of defendants. Independently of statute, the rule is that, where the liability on the covenant is joint, all the defendants must be joined,⁴⁵ but, by statute, plaintiff may be permitted to sue one only of the covenantors.⁴⁶ Where the liability is several, the action must be several;⁴⁷ and where joint and several, the action may be against one or all.⁴⁸

Where one of two joint obligors dies, the action should be brought against the survivor only, and not against both,⁴⁹ and if he dies the action must be brought against the legal representative of the survivor only.⁵⁰

Two persons covenanting with another by distinct and separate writings, the one for performance of several duties and the other to become the surety for the performance thereof, cannot be sued in the same action for a breach of the covenant,⁵¹ nor can indorsers of a warranty deed be sued in the same action with the maker,⁵² but in the case of successive warrants, the covenantee may join in one action for breach of warranty both his immediate and the remote warrantors.⁵³

An action for breach of covenants running with the land cannot be maintained against a part only of the subsequent grantees bound thereby.⁵⁴ In an action by the vendor on a covenant made by the purchaser of land in the deed, the assignees of the purchaser cannot be joined with him as parties defendant.⁵⁵ In some jurisdictions, a wife is not a proper party to an action for breach of a

Form of action

(1) A complaint in vendees' action against vendors in possession after conveyance, for the value of a crop harvested during such period by vendor's tenant, if susceptible to interpretation as one for conversion, might also be considered as one for breach of covenants, the distinctions between forms of action having been abolished.—Miller v. Smith, 205 P. 386, 119 Wash. 163.

(2) A complaint alleging that plaintiff was the owner of realty conveyed to him in fee simple by defendants by warranty deed, that plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession which defendants failed to give, and that by reason thereof plaintiff was deprived of the use and enjoyment of the premises for nine and one-half months, that the value of the rents and profits were a certain amount claimed as damages sustained, was held one for wrongful occupation, not breach of covenant.—Adams v. g. Damages

h. Amendments

a. In General

The declaration, petition, or complaint must contain allegations of all the facts essential to the cause of action.

The declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for breach of covenant must in all cases state every fact necessary to constitute a cause of action;⁵⁸ and no other facts need be alleged.⁵⁹ Immaterial allegations will be regarded as surplusage.⁶⁰ Mere statement of conclusions is insufficient; the facts must be alleged.⁶¹

Where the covenant is contained in a deed of land situated in another state, a complaint stating a cause of action for breach of covenant under the laws of the forum is sufficient.⁶²

The covenant sued on must be alleged,⁶³ including the execution of it by sealing, as discussed in subdivision d of this section, as must delivery.⁶⁴ The deed need not be set out in haec verba, but only so much of the deed and covenant as is es-

Implied covenant

In an action of covenant based on a general warranty in a deed of lands situated in another state, and claiming a breach of an implied specific covenant, the declaration is fatally defective in not alleging a law of such other state prescribing that such specific covenant shall be so included in a general warranty.—Alcorn v. Epler, 206 Ill.App. 140.

Pleading according to form in instrument

Whatever may be the true doctrine as to the distinction between covenant to warrant and defend title and covenant for quiet enjoyment, it is far safer, to say the least, to plead the covenant according to the form of it in the deed.—Peck v. Houghtaling, 35 Mich. 127.

What covenants sued on

A suit wherein a petition recites a deed conveying land by the words "grant, bargain and sell," setting out that plaintiff was obliged to bring ejectment to gain possession of the land, and concluding with a prayer of damage, is a suit for breach of the covenants in the deed rather than for breach of the single covenant of seisin and plaintiff is, therefore, not limited to damages for breach of the covenants against encumbrances.—Lasswell Land & Lumber Co. v. Langdon, Mo.App., 204 S.W. 812.

64. Mo.—Perkins v. Reeds, 8 Mo. 33.

N.Y.—Gazley v. Price, 16 Johns. 267.

sential to the cause of action.⁶⁵ The covenant may be stated according to its legal effect.⁶⁶ The date of the covenant⁶⁷ and the person with whom it was made, as stated infra in subdivision b, of this section should be stated. Profert of the deed, or some excuse for the omission, should usually be made.⁶⁸ Under the rule that a seal imports a consideration, stated in the title Contracts § 72, where it is alleged that the instrument was executed under seal,⁶⁹ it is not necessary to state the consideration of defendant's covenant,⁷⁰ unless the performance of it constitutes a condition precedent, under the rules discussed in subdivision c of this section; but where the covenant is not alleged to be under seal, there is authority that the consideration must be averred.⁷¹ In an action for breach of covenant of seisin, the declaration or complaint should, it has been held, describe the land by metes and bounds.⁷²

b. Averments as to Parties

The declaration, petition, or complaint must with some exceptions contain an averment with whom the covenant was made, and privity of estate between plaintiff and the covenantor must be shown.

In an action for breach of covenant it must be averred with whom the covenant was made,⁷³ although the rule does not apply to deed polls.⁷⁴ Privity of estate or contract between plaintiff and the covenantor must be shown.⁷⁵ Where an action is by an assignee of the covenant, it is not necessary that he should be described as "assign-nee."⁷⁶ A declaration, both as heirs and devisees, without showing in particular how they were heirs, and without setting out the will, is a sufficient averment of title.⁷⁷

c. Allegation as to Performance of Condition Precedent

Performance of conditions precedent at the place and within the required time must be alleged, or tender of performance, or excuse for nonperformance stated. However, performance by plaintiff of an independent covenant need not be alleged.

Plaintiff must allege the performance on his part or a tender of performance or excuse for nonperformance of a condition precedent, if any there be, at the place and within the time required,⁶⁸ and an averment merely of readiness and willingness to perform is not generally regarded as sufficient.⁷⁹ As indicated supra § 25, this rule applies to an action for breach of a mutual concurrent covenant. Where the covenants of the parties are independent of each other, in an action for breach of the covenant by either, plaintiff need not allege performance on his part.⁸⁰ Where the condition precedent involves a question of law the manner of performance must be pointed out, but where it is a mere question of fact, a general averment of performance is proper.⁸¹

d. Averment of Seal

Where the covenant must be under seal, in some jurisdictions there must be an averment that the covenant was sealed by the defendant; in other jurisdictions this is not necessary.

Covenant held within rule

According to the weight of authority, where as is considered in § 4 a covenant must be under seal, it must be averred specifically, in an action for breach of covenant, that it was sealed by defendant,⁸² and it has been held that an action for covenant broken cannot be maintained on a deed in which the seal has been obliterated;⁸³ but according to some authorities an allegation of sealing is unnecessary, the reason being that an allegation that defendant covenanted by a deed or an indenture includes an averment of sealing.⁸⁴

e. Allegation of Demand of Performance

When a demand for performance is essential to impose liability on defendant, it must be alleged.

Where a special request for performance is necessary to impose on defendant liability on his covenant, as stated in § 88 supra, such request must be averred,⁸⁵ but not otherwise.⁸⁶

f. Averment of Breach

- (1) In general
- (2) Averment of eviction
- (3) Negating language of covenant
- (4) Description of paramount claim
- (5) Averment of notice to defend

(1) In General

Breach of the covenant sued on must be alleged, but one assignment is sufficient except in the case of alternative covenants. Exceptions or provisos in the covenant must be excluded. The breach may be assigned according to its legal effect.

The declaration or complaint in an action for breach of covenant must definitely show that the covenant is broken,⁸⁷ and while several breaches may be assigned, the assignment of one good breach is sufficient to support the action.⁸⁸ In case of an alternative covenant, breach of both alternatives must be shown;⁸⁹ and where the covenant contains exceptions or provisos the breach assigned must be excluded from such exceptions or provisos.⁹⁰ It is sufficient as a rule to assign a breach of covenant according to its legal effect, or in words which contain its sense and substance;⁹¹ but the assignment must conform to the covenant as set out, and the breach must not be for more than is covenanted to be performed.⁹² To show breach of a covenant of title implied from the use of particular words, it has been held necessary to aver that the title has failed in consequence of some act of the grantor.⁹³ In an action for breach of a covenant of warranty as to the quantity of land conveyed, it is unnecessary to allege a mutual mistake as to the number of acres.⁹⁴

(2) Averment of Eviction

An eviction or its equivalent must be alleged where the action is for breach of a covenant of warranty or quiet enjoyment, unless the vendor is insolvent or non-resident; but, except under statute, eviction need not be averred when the action is for breach of covenants of seizin, of good right to convey, or against encumbrances. While the facts constituting the eviction need not be stated, it is permissible to state them.

The general rule is that in action for the breach of a covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment an eviction or something tantamount thereto must be alleged,⁹⁵ but an exception to the rule is said to exist if the vendor is insolvent or nonresident;⁹⁶ and, as is stated in § 125 g, nominal damages may be recovered without an allegation of eviction or its equivalent; but, since covenants of seizin, of good right to convey, or against encumbrances, are broken, if at all, as soon as made, as is pointed out supra §§ 40, 41, and 42 respectively, unless otherwise provided by statute,⁹⁷ in an action for breach of these covenants an eviction need not as a rule be alleged,⁹⁸ although some doubt has been expressed as to whether the rule applies in all cases.⁹⁹ No particular formality is required in averring an eviction;¹ nor is it necessary to set out the facts attending the eviction or particularly to describe the adverse title,² it being sufficient merely to allege in general terms an eviction under a title paramount to that of the covenantor, as stated in § 125 f (4), although a declaration setting out all of the facts constituting an eviction is good.³

In actions for breach of covenants of seizin and good right to convey, generally it is sufficient to negative the words of the covenant, but in some jurisdictions the person seized must be alleged, and in any case, where a general assignment does not necessarily show a breach, special averments are necessary. In actions for breach of covenants against encumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, and of warranty, the breach must be specifically stated.

While it has been held that in an action on the covenants of seizin it is necessary not only to aver that the covenantor was not seized, but also who was seized,⁴ the general rule is that, in the absence of a statute to the contrary,⁵ in actions for breach of the covenants of seizin and good right to convey it is sufficient to negative the words of the covenant generally;⁶ but this rule is subject to the exception that, when such a general assignment does not necessarily show a breach, special averments are required.⁷

In actions for breach of covenants against encumbrances, for quiet enjoyment, or of warranty, as a rule the breaches must be specifically set forth,⁸ and it has been held that in an action for breach of covenants against encumbrances the extinguishment of the encumbrance by plaintiff must be alleged.⁹ However, in some cases a complaint has been held sufficient as against a general demurrer, notwithstanding it failed specifically to set forth the breach of a covenant against encumbrances,¹⁰ or of warranty.¹¹

(4) Description of Paramount Claim

Where the action is for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, the encumbrances relied on must be stated and the title of defendant connected thereto. Where the breach is of a covenant of warranty, or for quiet enjoyment, an allegation of eviction under a lawful and paramount title is sufficient without stating such title, except in a jurisdiction requiring eviction on judicial determination.

As is stated in § 125 f (2), it is unnecessary in an action for breach of the covenants of seizin and of good right to convey to do more than merely negative the words of the covenant, but a different rule prevails with regard to a covenant against encumbrances, and an assignment of a breach of the covenant against encumbrances must not only set out the particular encumbrance relied on,¹² but must also connect the title of defendant therewith,¹³ although it is not necessary to set forth the encumbrance more than substantially.¹⁴

In an action for a breach of covenant of warranty while a mere allegation that plaintiff has been evicted and that the title conveyed to him has failed has been held insufficient,¹⁵ it has generally been held that, in an action for breach of covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment, it is sufficient if an eviction under a lawful and paramount title is clearly alleged, without entering into a particular description of such title,¹⁶ subject to the requirement, in jurisdictions in which it is held that nothing less than a judgment is sufficient eviction, stated in § 112 supra, that not only must eviction on judicial determination of the title be alleged,¹⁷ but the nature of the claim on which the judgment was rendered must also be alleged;¹⁸ and in another jurisdiction the court found it unnecessary to pass on the question whether the petition should contain allegations specifically stating wherein and how the alleged outstanding titles were paramount, in view of other rulings in the case.¹⁹ It has been held that, if the covenantor has been notified of the eviction suit, the declaration need not allege that the recovery was by an older and better title.²⁰

(5) Averment of Notice to Defend

Notice to the covenantor to defend need not be averred.

Although, as stated in § 90 supra, a covenantor is not precluded by an adverse judgment against the title conveyed unless he has been vouched, it is not necessary in an action for breach of covenant to aver that the covenantor had notice of the suit by which the covenantee was evicted.²¹

g. Damages

The declaration, petition, or complaint in an action for breach of covenant must contain allegations serving as a foundation for the proper measure of damages. General damages are recoverable under a general ad damnum or prayer for general relief; special or consequential damages must be pleaded to be recoverable.

The declaration, petition, or complaint with respect of damages for breach of covenant is governed by the usual rules of pleading damages, discussed in the C.J.S. title Damages §§ 129-140, also 17 C.J. p 998 note 36-p 1020 note 15. Proper allegations as a foundation for the application of the proper measure of damages must be made.²²

Special or consequential damages must be pleaded to be recoverable.²⁶

Nominal damages may be recovered without an allegation of eviction or its equivalent.²⁷ Likewise, in the absence of an averment of special damages, a declaration alleging only a formal breach of covenant justifies recovery only of nominal damages.²⁸

h. Amendments

Amendments either by the addition of a count or by correction of an erroneous count are permissible.

A declaration counting on one or more covenants may be amended by adding a count on another covenant,²⁹ or by correcting an erroneous count.³⁰ A petition in an action for breach of warranty of title to land which claims as the measure of plaintiff's damages the value of the property to which title has failed is amendable so as to make the damages claimed the purchase price of the property.³¹

§ 126. Plea or Answer

The general rules of pleading control as to the form and sufficiency of defendant's pleadings.

The rules governing pleas and answers in actions for breach of covenants are those which regulate such pleadings in civil actions generally, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading §§ 99-166, also 49 C.J. p 179 note 58-p 296 note 48.³² Performance of the covenants by defendant must be pleaded.³³ Payments made by the covenantor to the covenantee on account of the breach should be specially pleaded when relied on in bar,³⁴ and such a plea, if not sustained, admits nothing more than plaintiff's right to recover nominal damages.³⁵ The amount of the damages laid is not traversable matter, and defendant need not deny it.³⁶

Pleas by way of confession and avoidance must confess the truth of the allegations which they purport to answer, as stated in the C.J.S. title Pleading § 165, also 49 C.J. p 292 note 81-p 293 note 87, and must explicitly state all facts necessary to constitute a lawful avoidance coextensive with confession.³⁷ Such a plea must conclude with a veri-

Assumption of payment of taxes by person asserting breach of warranty, being a defense in avoidance, must be specially pleaded.—Levenberg v. Shanks, supra.

Dower rights of wife

(1) Action for breach of covenant against encumbrance, alleging that plaintiff paid dower claim with knowledge of defendant's "claim" that dower claimant was not defendant's wife, is insufficient.—Carney v. Morrison, 228 N.Y.S. 308, 223 App.Div. 214, motion granted 164 N.E. 565, 249 N.Y. 511.

(2) Likewise, a defense based on dower rights of defendant's wife is insufficient to show wife's release of dower.—Carney v. Morrison, supra.

Plea of grantee's knowledge of defects claimed covered by warranty is bad.—Lost Creek Coal & Mineral Land Co. v. Hendon, 110 So. 308, 215 Ala. 212.

Bona fide purchaser

In grantee's suit for breach of warranty on ground that prior to deed grantor had conveyed property to others who had not placed their deed of record, where grantee alleged facts showing that he was an innocent purchaser for value, there was no necessity for plea by grantor that grantee was an innocent purchaser for value to entitle grantor to defend on ground that grantee received title superior to unrecorded

fication.³⁸ Where a proviso or exception is in the body of the covenant, the party seeking to avoid it must plead it in his answer,³⁹ but, if the proviso or exception is contained in a separate clause of the contract, the party pleading it need only state enough to show prima facie a right of action, leaving the matter of exception to be pleaded by the adversary.⁴⁰ New matter in confession and avoidance must be specially pleaded.⁴¹ Where equitable relief is sought, a special plea alleging the matter relied on should set forth the facts constituting such matter with sufficient certainty to apprise plaintiff of the character of the defense relied on and to enable the court to determine whether equitable relief should be granted.⁴²

Affidavit. A statutory requirement that a defendant must attach an affidavit of merits with his plea when plaintiff has attached an affidavit to his declaration applies to an action for breach of covenant of warranty.⁴³

§ 127. Subsequent Pleadings

- a. Demurrer
- b. Replication

a. Demurrer

General principles governing demurrers generally control as to demurrers in actions for breach of covenants.

The rules of pleading governing demurrer in actions generally, discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading §§ 211-274, also 49 C.J. p 362 note 50-p 465 note

81, are of course controlling in actions for breach of covenant.⁴⁴ Statutory requirements that matters of substance must be distinctly stated in the demurrer must be complied with.⁴⁵ If two counts of a declaration are for the same cause of action, on the same covenant, and one count is good, the declaration is good on general demurrer.⁴⁶ Where one breach is well assigned in the declaration, a general demurrer will not be sustained,⁴⁷ but, if the breach is not well assigned, defendant is entitled to judgment, although his plea is bad.⁴⁸ The fact that a declaration does not in direct terms allege matters of substance, but only includes them by inference from exhibits, is not ground on which general demurrer may be based.⁴⁹ In an action for breach of covenant of seizin, demurrer lies as to a declaration which fails to describe the land by metes and bounds,⁵⁰ but a declaration alleging breach of a general and unqualified covenant of seizin is not demurrable.⁵¹ In an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, a demurrer that the complaint states as a conclusion that an alleged agreement constituted an easement, right of way, or encumbrances through and on the property is not sustainable,⁵² but a complaint failing to show a valid encumbrance is demurrable.⁵³ In an action for breach of covenant of warranty, a complaint not complying with statutory requirements is demurrable,⁵⁴ and a petition which fails to contain allegations showing possession by plaintiff or his grantee is bad on demurrer.⁵⁵

Manget*, 186 S.E. 880, 53 Ga. App. 637.

(2) In suit for breach of warranty of title, allegation of petition that as result of suit filed against plaintiff on outstanding paramount title plaintiff was evicted from premises to her injury and damage in designated amount was held sufficient as allegation of damage resulting from alleged breach of warranty of title to property from which plaintiff was evicted.—Reese v. Manget, supra.

55. U.S.—Edgemont Coal Co. v. Asher, D.C.Ky., 298 F. 1000.

b. Replication

A replication in an action for breach of covenant must traverse the truth of new matter introduced by the plea or confess and avoid the plea. When relied on, conditions must be pleaded in the replication. The replication must conform to the declaration.

A replication which does not traverse the truth of new matter introduced by the plea,⁵⁶ or confess and avoid the plea,⁵⁷ is bad. If plaintiff relies on conditions, he must plead them by way of replication.⁵⁸ The replication must in all cases conform to the declaration,⁵⁹ but, if a replication is good as to either of the breaches assigned in the declaration and answered in the plea, it will be upheld on demurrer.⁶⁰ In an action for breach of the covenant of seizin, the replication to defendant's plea maintaining his seizin should aver who in fact was seized.⁶¹

§ 128. Issues, Proof, and Variance

In an action for breach of covenant the proof must conform to the allegations, and be confined to the issues made by the pleadings. Only material matters in issue need be proved. Matters which may be shown under the plea of general issue may be proved without being specially pleaded. A material variance between the pleadings and proof is fatal.

The proof in actions for breach of covenant must conform to the allegations, and be confined to the issues made by the pleadings.⁶² Material matters put in issue must be proved,⁶³ but it is sufficient to prove the substance of the issue.⁶⁴ Matters admitted by the pleadings, or not put in issue, need not be proved.⁶⁵ The default by defendant in an action of covenant admits all the traversable averments in the declaration, but not the amount of damages, and leaves nothing to be done but the ascertainment and assessment of the damages, so that proof may be made of the damages sustained.⁶⁶

Under the general issue, so called, that is, a general denial of the facts relied on to show a liability on the covenant, defendant may introduce in evidence special facts inconsistent with the case alleged by plaintiff,⁶⁷ and whatever may be shown under such issue may be shown without being pleaded specially;⁶⁸ however, proof of changed conditions cannot be made under such a plea.⁶⁹ Where the facts alleged in a declaration may constitute a breach of either of several covenants, plaintiff is not, on such a case being shown, required to elect on which covenant he will seek a

Theory of cause of action

Plaintiffs cannot recover from their grantor on theory of tort, where action was treated as an action on warranty.—Campbell v. Rogers, 211 N.W. 768, 191 Wis. 570.

Proof held admissible under pleadings

(1) In suit for breach of warranty of title, allegations in the petition that the price paid for all the land purchased by plaintiff was eight thousand dollars, and that the price paid for the land to which the title failed was twenty-five dollars an acre, were held sufficient to admit evidence of the price paid for all the land, whether in money or property, and of the proportional part of such price represented by the land lost.—

Northcutt v. Hume, Tex.Com.App. 212 S.W. 157, reversing, Civ.App., 174 S.W. 974.

(2) Payments made by the covenantor to the covenantee on account of the breach may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages under the plea of covenants performed.—Ferris v. Mosher, 27 Vt. 218, 65 Am.D. 192.

Proof held inadmissible under pleadings

(1) Purchaser suing vendor for breach of warranty, who alleged that title was in government, could not introduce evidence to show title in third person.—National Cypress Pole & Piling Co. v. Hemphill Lumber Co., 31 S.W.2d 1059, 325 Mo. 807.

(2) That party asserting breach of warranty in land title was himself responsible, hence not entitled to damages, must be specially pleaded, and, unless pleaded, evidence thereon is inadmissible.—Levenberg v. Shanks, 115 So. 641, 165 La. 419.

Particular matters

(1) One cannot recover for breach of covenant of general warranty unless proving eviction or exception to rule requiring eviction before general warranty is breached.—Jones v. Avondale Heights Co., supra.

(2) Evidence that covenantor had notice of adverse suit is admissible in suit on covenants of warranty where put in issue, notwithstanding absence of allegation of notice.—Smith v. Nussbaum, Mo.App., 71 S.W. 2d 82.

(3) In order to enforce covenants running with land, privity of estate between parties to contract and parties to litigation wherein such enforcement is sought must be proved.—McCoy v. Wabash Ry. Co., Mo. App., 203 S.W. 249.

(4) A covenant of good right to convey being breached when made if the covenantor had no title, in an action for the breach of such covenant because the covenantor did not have title to the mineral, evidence of eviction, ouster, or surrender was unnecessary.—Partridge v. Bates, 78 So. 911, 201 Ala. 557.

recovery;⁷⁰ but on the other hand, where two counts of a declaration are contradictory, a recovery cannot be had under both, since the cause of action set out in one would constitute a complete defense to that set out in the other.⁷¹ In case of the assignment of two or more distinct breaches, for one of which plaintiff has no cause of action, it is error to assess entire damages.⁷²

Variance. A material variance between the allegations and the proof, in actions for breach of covenant, is fatal;⁷³ but it is otherwise if the variance is immaterial.⁷⁴

§ 129. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

- a. Presumptions
- b. Burden of proof

a. Presumptions

The rules as to presumptions in civil actions generally apply in actions for breach of contract.

Certain legal presumptions may arise in actions on covenants from long continued possession of the premises in controversy,⁷⁵ especially as to the possession of uncultivated lands,⁷⁶ from long continued, peaceable, notorious, adverse, and uninterrupted enjoyment of an easement⁷⁷ or from the purchase of a paramount title by plaintiff,⁷⁸ or of purchasing with reference to liens.⁷⁹ So also certain presumptions may arise as to the consideration for a covenant,⁸⁰ as to notice of entry,⁸¹ and, according to some authorities, as to the surrender of the premises,⁸² although this seems opposed to the general rule, stated infra § 129 b, that a covenantee who surrenders without suit has the burden of showing that he yielded to a title paramount. Where the purchase price of land is paid in property, there is no presumption that either party obtained an advantage in the trade.⁸³ It has been held that there is no presumption that particular lands to which title failed were of the same proportionate value as other lands embraced in the conveyance,⁸⁴ but where the parties dealt on a "per acre price," without notice of any differences in quality, uniformity of quality was presumed.⁸⁵ The value of the whole estate, as compared to the value of the part lost by failure of title, is not to be conclusively presumed to be the price fixed by the parties at the time of the conveyance.⁸⁶ Tax proceedings are presumed to be valid⁸⁷ and the amount of a special assessment recited in an execution therefor is presumed to be correct.⁸⁸

The burden of proof rests upon the party holding the affirmative of the issue.

In actions for breach of covenant, as in other actions, the burden of proof rests upon the party holding the affirmative of the issue,⁸⁹ whether it

(2) Other instances see 15 C.J. p 1308 note 71 [a].

Variance held not to be shown

(1) In purchaser's suit for breach of covenant of warranty in deed, proof that title to land was found to be in third person instituting ejectment suit in which the warrantors were vouched into court and that purchaser paid amount of decree in ejectment suit covering value of land and mesne profits to protect purchaser's improvements and avoid a sale was not at variance with allegation that purchaser was evicted by reason of judgment in ejectment suit.

be plaintiff⁹⁰ or defendant.⁹¹ Thus the burden is on plaintiff to prove the amount of his damages;⁹² and a defendant who pleads performance of his covenant assumes the burden of proving performance.⁹³ By pleading title in himself at the execution of a deed containing a covenant of seizin, or probably of good right to convey, defendant, under the common-law system of pleading, assumes the burden of proving such title,⁹⁴ although where the plea, instead of averring performance of the covenant of seizin, avers that defendant has not broken his covenants, while plaintiff by his joinder avers that he has, plaintiff assumes the burden of proving the breach;⁹⁵ and in some of the code states the reasons that gave rise to the common-law rule are held to be inapplicable, and the burden is on plaintiff to show wherein defendant's title was defective.⁹⁶ The burden is on plaintiff to show that such outstanding title or claim was in fact paramount, where he fails to notify his covenantor of the assertion of an adverse action under title paramount,⁹⁷ or where he has voluntarily yielded without suit to an outstanding title or claim;⁹⁸ however, it has been held that the latter rule is apposite only to a complaint charging a breach of the covenant of quiet enjoyment and of warranty, and not to a complaint counting on breaches of the covenants of seisin and good right to convey only, the burden of proving paramount title in such case being on defendant grantor.⁹⁹ Since a covenant not only implies, but generally expresses, a consideration, the burden is upon a party pleading no consideration in an action of covenant to sustain his plea;¹ and likewise the burden is on a party claiming that the consideration expressed was not the real consideration to show what the real consideration was.² On proof by plaintiff of a restriction in a former deed and its violation it is incumbent on defendant to show that the restriction was no longer in force.³ To maintain an action for the recovery of taxes paid by the grantee under a deed containing a covenant against encumbrances, plaintiff must prove the deed, the existence of the taxes as an encumbrance, and his payment thereof.⁴

§ 130. Admissibility of Evidence in General

Competent evidence tending to prove that the covenant was or was not broken, or which may be material on the question of damages is admissible.

Evidence which has a legitimate tendency to satisfy the jury that the covenant was or was not broken, or which may be material upon the question of damages, and which is not otherwise incompetent, should be admitted;⁵ but evidence that is immaterial or irrelevant as to either of these questions is, of course, inadmissible.⁶ It has been held that evidence of the value of real estate, in an action for breach of a covenant of warranty on the sale thereof, is confined to its value at the time of the conveyance, and that evidence of its value at the time of trial is inadmissible;⁷ but it has also been held that, in an action for breach of covenants of warranty and of seizin, evidence of the value of the land at the time of the conveyance is improper.⁸ A defendant in default has a right to introduce evidence tending to reduce the amount of damages claimed but not to introduce evidence by way of set-off.⁹ Expert testimony as to the difference in value between a perfect record title and that acquired was not called for where grantor did not have, nor intend to warrant, such title.¹⁰

Res gestæ. All the circumstances surrounding and explanatory of the transaction between the parties may be given in evidence as part of the res gestæ.¹¹

Documentary evidence. Unless the pleas admit the execution of the covenant, or allege excuse for nonperformance,¹² generally speaking the instrument containing the covenant alleged to have been broken is always admissible in evidence,¹³ provided plaintiff's claim of title has been established,¹⁴ notwithstanding the deed may in its terms vary in some measure from the allegations of the declaration.¹⁵ It has also been held that, in actions for breach of covenant contained in a deed, an option agreement under which the deed was made may be admissible in evidence to show the consideration for the deed,¹⁶ that a bond for title is admissible to show that defendants were bound to make a good warranty title,¹⁷ and that the papers showing the creation of the encumbrance or adverse title alleged as a breach of the covenant are admissible.¹⁸ It has been held, however, that, in an action for breach of covenants of seizin and of warranty, a deed containing such covenants is not admissible in evidence when some of the plaintiffs in the case are not entitled to sue on the covenants.¹⁹ A deed which has been reformed in an action therefor, being without force, is inadmissible.²⁰

§ 131. — Judgment as Evidence of Eviction

A judgment adverse to the covenantor or his successor in favor of the owner of the paramount right is admissible in an action on the covenant to show eviction.

A judgment adverse to the covenantee or one claiming under him in favor of the owner of the paramount title or right is admissible in an action by him against the covenantor for breach of his covenant to show the fact of eviction,²¹ irrespective of whether or not the covenantor had notice of such suit.²² So also it has generally been held that the record of a judgment rendered against the covenantee in an action brought by him against the person in possession is evidence of what is equivalent to an eviction,²³ although the correctness of this rule has been questioned,²⁴ especially where the judgment was rendered in an action by the grantee against one not claiming under his grantor.²⁵

§ 132. — Judgment as Evidence of Paramount Title or Right

A judgment of eviction in an action against the covenantee is prima facie evidence of paramount title in a subsequent action by the covenantee against the covenantor, and conclusive upon the latter if he has been notified to defend the title in the prior action.

While there are, as shown supra § 89, a few cases which contend that a vendor cannot be brought in to defend a title set up against his grantee in a suit brought by the latter, and which consequently hold that a judgment against the covenantee in such case would not relieve him of the onus of proving that he was evicted by title paramount,²⁶ a judgment against the covenantee or one claiming under him whether the suit is by or against him²⁷ has generally been held to be prima facie evidence in an action against the covenantor for breach of his covenant against a paramount title or right in another,²⁸ provided the covenantor was called on or given notice to defend the suit in which the judgment was rendered,²⁹ subject sometimes to certain limitations.³⁰ Again in some cases the judgment has been held prima facie

Suit by remote covenantee

Where covenantor against encumbrances was notified by his covenantee to defend suit by third person against the covenantee for breach of covenantee's similar covenant in deed of the property to such third person, and the covenantor failed to do so, the judgment recovered by the third person against the covenantee settled, as against the covenantor, that there was an encumbrance.—Ballou v. Clarke, 120 A. 438, 80 N.H. 577.

evidence of eviction, but not of paramount title;³¹ and it has been held that a judgment in a prior action of which the grantor had notice, finding the title unmarketable, does not in a subsequent action establish breach of the covenant of title.³² In those jurisdictions, where ejectment is a mere possessory action and a judgment therein confers no title on the successful party, it is no defense to an action in the federal court of another state by the grantee of land in such state to recover damages for the breach of covenants of seizin that the covenantor has succeeded to the rights of the prevailing party in ejectment and has duly conveyed them to plaintiff, in the absence of other proof of title in such prevailing party.³³

Effect of notice. It is now the prevailing rule in the United States that, in the absence of fraud or collusion, where the covenantor has been given proper notice to defend the eviction suit, he is concluded by a judgment rendered therein against his grantee's title;³⁴ and this rule applies with particular force where the covenantor was a party to the eviction suit.³⁵ It has been held, however, that where a grantee has been evicted by a subordinate title which he precluded himself from contesting by his own declarations and acts, his grantor when sued on his covenant may show title paramount in himself, although he had notice to defend;³⁶ and that the warrantor, in an action against him for breach of covenant of warranty upon the ground that a judgment had been rendered against the grantee for only a part of the land, will not preclude the grantor from showing that such part of the land was not included in the land covered by the warranty, although he had notice of the eviction suit;³⁷ and it has also been held that a covenantor is not bound by a judgment in ejectment against his grantee even when duly requested to defend the action, if not allowed after an adverse judgment to pay the cost and take a statutory new trial.³⁸ Unless notified, he is not concluded,³⁹ but this rule does not apply where the suit was instituted at the instigation of the covenantor,⁴⁰ and an exception to the rule prevails in Louisiana where the judgment of eviction was obtained in another state.⁴¹

§ 133. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence

Decision to covenantor's advantage

In suit against defendant on warranty in his deed by plaintiffs who had defended title after notice to defendant, defendant could not complain of action of court in awarding improvements to defendants in such suits, decision being to defendant's advantage.—Talbert v. Finality of judgment

Where land was conveyed by defendant to plaintiff by general warranty deed, and in an action against them there was a judgment that title was never in defendant, and canceling the deed, defendant had same right to appeal from judgment as plaintiff, and when neither appealed, the judgment became final; and the record of such judgment is conclusive evidence of the paramount title of adverse claimant.—Rennie v. § 134. Trial

The party who holds the affirmative of the issue, whether plaintiff or defendant, has the right to open and close.

The party who holds the affirmative of the issue has the right to open and to close the argument to the jury.⁴⁶ Inasmuch as plaintiff must prove the damages occasioned by the breach of the covenant, the right to open and to close the argument lies with him.⁴⁷ Where, however, defendant pleads performance of covenant, he must begin the evidence and conclude to the jury.⁴⁸

§ 135. — Questions of Law and Fact

Questions of law are for the court, and disputed questions of fact for the jury.

It is the province of the court, and not of the jury, to determine questions of law,⁴⁹ such as questions of construction,⁵⁰ and what constitutes a reasonable time for a grantor to perform his covenant to cure defects in title.⁵¹ It is the province of the jury to determine questions of fact,⁵² such as the amount of damages recoverable,⁵³ whether defendant performed its obligations under the covenant,⁵⁴ whether the grantee knew, or should have known of an existing encumbrance,⁵⁵ and whether any money of plaintiffs was used in removing an encumbrance.⁵⁶ It has been held that the facts, whether the covenantor was given notice to defend an action brought against his covenantee, and of what the notice consisted, are to be determined by the court in an action by the covenantee to recover damages for breach of the covenant,⁵⁷ where no request is made that they be submitted to the jury;⁵⁸ but according to other authorities these questions, like other questions of fact, are to be determined by the jury.⁵⁹ If there is no material question of fact for submission to the jury on which there is any substantial controversy, the court may direct a verdict.⁶⁰ The mere claim of an excessive amount of damages is no ground for dismissal of the action.⁶¹

Correct instructions should be given on matters in issue.

In accordance with the general rules applicable in the trial of a civil case generally, in actions for breach of covenant the court should correctly instruct the jury as to the law applicable to the case.⁶²

§ 137. — Verdict and Findings

The verdict and findings should conform to the pleadings and proof.

In an action for breach of covenant, the verdict and findings, while coextensive with the issues,⁶³ must be confined to the evidence in the case,⁶⁴ and, where the action is against the heirs of a covenantor, should be in solido.⁶⁵ A general verdict cannot be sustained where any one of the breaches assigned in the declaration or complaint is substantially defective,⁶⁶ and is unsupported by proof of a partial breach.⁶⁷ Similarly a judgment for general damages must be supported by a finding of the amount of such damages.⁶⁸ A finding which necessarily includes another upon an essential issue is good.⁶⁹

§ 138. Judgment

The judgment should be in accordance with the issues and proof in the particular case.

Judgment may be rendered for any amount justly due, not exceeding the ad damnum.⁷⁰ Where an action is brought on the covenant of seizin, and also that of warranty, plaintiff will at his election be allowed to take judgment on either;⁷¹ and, where a defendant tenders nominal damages, plaintiff does not waive his right to a judgment by going to the jury on the defense of title in defendant by adverse possession, where he has demurred to defendant's case on the evidence;⁷² nor does defendant waive his right to appear and tender evidence at the assessment of damages by suffering a judgment by default.⁷³ Since the rule as to joint tortfeasors is not applicable to breach of covenant, in an action for damages against defendants for breach by each defendant of one or more restrictive covenants in uniform deeds a judgment for damages against all of the defendants jointly and severally is erroneous.⁷⁴ In an action of covenant against two persons, if one of them pleads infancy, and it is found for him, plaintiff may enter a nolle prosequi against him and have judgment against the other.⁷⁵ In a suit founded upon an allegation that plaintiff was evicted from certain land, on a showing that he was evicted from only half the land, a judgment of nonsuit as to the half from which he was not evicted is proper.⁷⁶ On recovery for breach of a warranty which fixed the purchase price as the measure of damages, cancellation of outstanding notes for the remainder of the purchase price, and a lien on the property to secure the recovery of the purchase money already paid, may be decreed.⁷⁷ A party asserting a claim for equitable relief and also for damages for breach of warranty may, in the adjustment of equities, be denied judgment on the warranty where he has already been awarded, on his prayer for equitable relief, more than his warranty would entitle him to.⁷⁸

Where covenantor is sued jointly with, or impleaded by, covenantee. Where both the covenantor and the covenantee are joined in an action to try title to the land conveyed, and judgment is recovered against them, the covenantee is entitled to judgment in the same action against the covenantor.⁷⁹ So too it has been held that where, upon eviction under a paramount title, the grantee of a covenantee sues him for breach of his covenant of warranty and the latter causes his covenantor to be impleaded, he is entitled to judgment for the consideration paid by him, with interest, although no judgment is recovered against him.⁸⁰

In action against estate of deceased covenantor. In an action against the administrator, widow, and heirs of a covenantor, the judgment should be against them in solido, with an order as to the administrator quando acciderint.⁸¹ Where it does not appear in what capacity defendant holds the decedent's estate, whether as executor or devisee, it is error to award judgment against him in both capacities.⁸²

§ 139. Execution

A successful plaintiff may in a proper case be denied execution until he releases other covenants or lodges a discharge from his grantee; and a capias ad satisfaciendum will not ordinarily issue where arrest has been abolished in contract actions.

In case of a recovery on a covenant of seizin in a deed in which there are other covenants which run with the land, plaintiff should be required to give a release of those covenants before he is allowed to take out execution;⁸³ and, where plaintiff has conveyed the land, the court will order a stay of execution until he shall have lodged a discharge or quitclaim deed from his grantee.⁸⁴ In the absence of fraud a capias ad satisfaciendum will not issue on a judgment for breach of covenant in those jurisdictions in which arrest has been abolished in actions ex contractu.⁸⁵

§ 140. Appeal and Error

General rules governing appeals and writs of error apply.

The law governing appeals and writs of error in civil cases generally obtains in actions for breach of covenant. Thus error must be shown affirmatively by the record;⁸⁶ an objection not interposed below will not be considered by the higher court;⁸⁷ harmless error is no ground for reversal;⁸⁸ and a verdict which does substantial justice between the parties,⁸⁹ or a finding of fact which is sustained by the evidence,⁹⁰ will not be disturbed; but a judgment not sustained by the evidence will be reversed.⁹¹

§ 141. Effect of Recovery on Title to Property

Although there is authority to the contrary, it is held that recovery for total breach of covenant revests title in the covenantor and estops the covenantee thereafter to set up the deed as a conveyance.

While it has been said to be obvious that a covenantee should not be allowed to recover damages for total breach of the covenant and also hold the land by virtue of the conveyance,⁹² the effect upon the title of a judgment for breach of covenant has been found by the courts to be a subject of some difficulty. Thus it has been held that the title revests in the covenantor;⁹³ that the recovery operates as an estoppel of the covenantee afterward to set up the deed as a conveyance of land against the grantor;⁹⁴ that the covenantor is entitled to a reconveyance free from any encumbrances created by the covenantee or those claiming under him,⁹⁵ and if a reconveyance is refused a court of equity will compel it;⁹⁶ and that a recovery of the purchase money for breach of warranty works a rescission.⁹⁷ Similarly it has been held that, where permanent damages are awarded for breach of a covenant restricting the use of property, it is proper to require the delivery to defendant of a release from such covenant.⁹⁸ On the other hand, however, it has been held that a recovery on the covenant against encumbrances will not divest the covenantee of title;⁹⁹ and that a covenantee who recovers as for a total breach of the covenant is under no obligation to reconvey the land to his covenantor,¹ and equity will not compel him so to do.² Likewise, it has been held that, in the absence of an allegation that no interest passed by the deed, and where in fact an equitable title did pass, a recovery by the grantee will not estop him from afterward claiming the property.³ In case of a partial breach, if the covenantee sues without an offer to rescind, he can recover only to the extent of the breach, the sale and conveyance remaining in force as to the part to which there is no failure of title.⁴

§ 142. Damages

- a. Measure of damages for breach
- b. Assumption of indebtedness
- c. What law governs
- d. Covenants of title generally

a. Measure of Damages for Breach

Compensation for the actual loss suffered is the measure of damages for breach of covenant. At least nominal damages are recoverable for any breach.

The measure of damages for breach of covenant is compensation for the actual loss suffered by reason of the breach.⁵ Where the breach is in fact absolute,⁶ or where the performance of the covenant has become impossible by reason of the total destruction of the subject matter of the contract,⁷ damages should be given as for a total breach. On the breach of a personal covenant, the damages recoverable are a sum sufficient to put plaintiff in the position in which he would have stood if the covenant had been kept.⁸ Where a mortgage made by the grantee is outstanding at the time of suit, its amount must be deducted from the sum otherwise recoverable on covenants running with the land, as it is pro tanto an assignment.⁹

Contingent and speculative damages cannot be recovered,¹⁰ nor will plaintiff be able to recover for losses or damage unconnected with the breach of the covenant sued on.¹¹

—Brusco v. Pate, 153 A. 311, 51 R.I. 222.

Consideration not determinative

Damages are awarded as compensation for the injury suffered and not to restore the consideration paid; hence the measure of damages for a breach of covenant is the value of the benefit contracted for, be it greater or less than the consideration paid.—Hoffer Oil Corporation v. Carpenter, C.C.A.Okl., 34 F.2d 589, certiorari denied 50 S.Ct. 158, 280 U.S. 608, 74 L.Ed. 651.

Damages held to be excessive

(1) $3,000 damages to owner of residence property for breach of covenant in a trust agreement against erection of apartment houses on described lots is excessive, and should be reduced to $1,000.—Heitkemper v. Schmeer, 29 P.2d 540, 146 Or. 304, rehearing denied 30 P.2d 1119, 146 Or. 304.

(2) Damages of $1,120 for breach of a covenant in a deed conveying property subject to a mortgage which provided that, in case payment was demanded by the mortgagor, the grantor would procure an extension or a new mortgage held to be excessive and reduced to $975.—Miller v. H. J. & M. I. Realty Corporation, 188 N.Y.S. 446.

Taxes on unusable property

On vendor's breach of a covenant to construct an adequate bridge across a creek, leaving the lots inaccessible, taxes paid without any use of the property because of the absence of a bridge is recoverable as a proper element of damages.—Mueller v. Bankers' Trust Co. of Muskegon, 247 N.W. 103, 262 Mich. 53.

Covenant to convey seller's interest

Where A covenanted to convey to B his right, title, and interest in a slave, but not to warrant the title, and A had only a naked legal title to the slave, which was tainted with fraud, the measure of damages was only the value of A's interest, and, that being merely nominal, B could recover only nominal damages.—Whitehead v. Ducker, 11 Sm. & M. Miss., 98.

coverable only on proof of actual loss.¹³

Successive actions. The measure of damages against successive covenantors, in actions for the same breach of the same covenant, is the same in all.¹⁴

b. Assumption of Indebtedness

Damages for breach of purchaser's covenant to assume vendor's indebtedness are generally held to be the full amount of the debt assumed.

Where a purchaser of property agrees to assume and save the vendor harmless from certain outstanding indebtedness against him, the measure of damages in an action by the vendor upon a breach of such covenant has been held to be the full amount of the debt which the covenantee assumed to pay,¹⁵ although a different rule has been applied where the land is sold by virtue of an encumbrance which the grantee assumed to pay for a price exceeding the encumbrance.¹⁶

c. What Law Governs

The law in force at the date of the contract controls the measure of damages. The law of the forum governs the measure for breaches of covenants of seizin or warranty.

In all cases the law in force at the date of the contract governs in the determination of the measure of damages.¹⁷ In an action for a breach of covenant of seizin, the rule of damages in the state in which the action is brought will govern, although the land lies in another state,¹⁸ and the same rule applies with reference to covenants of warranty.¹⁹

- (2) Partial or temporary loss of estate

(1) Total Loss of Estate

The measure of damages for a breach of covenant of title resulting in a total loss of the estate is ordinarily the purchase money paid with interest. If grantee had possession the amount of the benefit he received is deductible.

As a general rule the measure of damages for a breach of the usual covenants of title resulting in a total loss of the estate conveyed is the purchase money paid, or the value of the consideration²⁰ with interest thereon, see infra § 149, from the date of the conveyance; or, as otherwise stated, in some cases the value of the land at the time of the conveyance estimated by the purchase price.²¹ It does not modify the rule that the actual consideration was paid in other commodities than money, or even in other real estate; this only requires that the value of such other property be ascertained.²² Not even the fact that grantee has been compelled to pay his own grantee a larger sum on a covenant of warranty will enlarge his claim for damages.²³

Where grantee has been in possession, the measure of damages is the consideration paid and interest, less any benefit, direct or indirect, taken under the deed;²⁴ and hence it has been held that, where the covenant embraced two tracts of land, only one of which was improved, interest can be recovered only on the consideration paid for the unimproved tract.²⁵ Where the benefits received by reason of the conveyance equal or exceed the consideration paid, with interest, there can be no recovery.²⁶ The measure of recovery by the person evicted is not necessarily determined by the amount paid by him to his immediate grantor, but is controlled by the amount received by the grantor in the chain of title, to whom he elects to look for compensation for the eviction.²⁷ Some authorities hold that the measure of damages is the amount paid by plaintiff for the land, with interest, not exceeding the amount paid defendant by his immediate grantee.²⁸ Other authorities hold that the measure of damages is the amount paid defendant by his immediate grantee with interest irrespective of what plaintiff may himself have paid.²⁹

Where a valuation of the land or of the consideration given and received therefor has been mutually agreed upon by the parties, such valuation is the proper measure of damages in an action for breach of the covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment;³⁰ but a covenant in case of eviction to pay double the purchase money and all damages entitled the covenantee to his purchase money and interest only.³¹

While it is the general rule that the damages for the breach of a covenant of warranty must be limited to the consideration paid, or the value of the land as agreed upon by the fixing of the consideration, with interest,³² nevertheless in a few jurisdictions a distinction has been made between the damages recoverable for the breach of a covenant of warranty and the breach of other covenants of title, holding that in the former case the damages recoverable is the value of the land at the time of eviction.³³ Still other cases say that the value of the land at the time of conveyance, with interest, affords the measure of damages.³⁴

Where the consideration cannot be ascertained the value of the land at the time of the conveyance, with interest thereon, is the measure of liability.³⁵ So, where the action is by a stranger to the consideration, the value of the land is the measure of damages,³⁶ or, as held in some cases, the consideration received for it by defendant instead of that paid by plaintiff.³⁷

Undertaking to perfect title. The general rule of damages as stated has been held not to apply where a vendor has sold lands to which he has not a perfect title, he undertaking to complete and make perfect the title, the proper measure of damages in such case being the value of the land at the time of eviction, with interest.³⁸ Damages recoverable after perfection of title by grantor, see infra § 142 d (5) (a), or by acquisition of title by grantee see infra § 142 d (5) (b), are separately considered elsewhere in this Title.

Consequential damages are not recoverable;³⁹ thus, as discussed infra § 142 d (6) as a general rule no account is taken of intervening improvements or of an increase or diminution of the value of the land.

(2) Partial or Temporary Loss of Estate

For a partial failure of title the measure of damages is generally held to be a proportionate part of the consideration fixed by the value of the estate lost as compared to that of the entire estate conveyed. The measure of damages for temporary deprivation of possession is compensation for the time of deprivation.

The general rule for the measurement of the damages in case of failure of title to a portion of the land conveyed is that the vendee can recover only such part of the original purchase price as bears the same ratio to the whole consideration that the value of the land to which the title has failed bears to the value of the whole premises,⁴⁰ such relative values to be ascertained as of the time of the conveyance instead of the time of the trial,⁴¹ together with interest, see infra § 149, and costs, see infra § 150. Thus the damages recoverable for a breach resulting in a partial loss of estate cannot exceed the amount of the consideration.⁴² While it is competent in applying this rule to consider peculiar advantages and disadvantages of the part lost,⁴³ the expense of erecting improvements on an adjoining tract should not be considered.⁴⁴

Where land is sold by the acre or front foot, the purchase price per acre or front foot of the part lost is the measure of damages;⁴⁵ but where the acreage of two tracts is sold for a gross sum, uniformity of value or the value of the part lost must be shown.⁴⁶ Incorporeal rights pertaining to the land may be taken into consideration in assessing the damages upon an eviction.⁴⁷ The general rule is not affected by the fact that the land was bought for a particular purpose which was known to the vendor,⁴⁸ and that the failure of title to a portion of it renders it useless for such purpose.⁴⁹ In an action against a remote grantor, the damages are limited to a proportionate part of the consideration received by such grantor.⁵⁰ The rule is subject to the same qualifications and conditions as those applicable in cases of total eviction.⁵¹

Benefits received by the grantee by reason of possession under the grant go in diminution of damages.⁵² When a deed passes an estate of value, although not that covenanted for, it is to be considered in measuring damages.⁵³ Thus, where the covenant is for a fee, and a life estate only passes by the deed, the damages are the consideration money less the value of the life estate.⁵⁴ Upon a partial breach which does not result in failure of title to any part of the land, or does not seriously interfere with the use for which the property was designed, the measure of damages has been held to be the diminished value of the tract,⁵⁵ or the value of the estate or interest lost.⁵⁶ Where plaintiff sells the land by the same description and succeeds in settling his own liability for the shortage by paying a certain sum to his grantees, this sum is the actual damage.⁵⁷

Where the breach consists of a mere encumbrance, as a mortgage, which may be removed by the payment of money, the measure of damages is the amount necessary to remove such encumbrance; and if such encumbrance is paid and removed by the grantor the damages are nominal.⁵⁸ If, however, the encumbrance exceeds the value of the estate granted, the damages are governed by the rule applicable to a total breach, see supra § 142 d (1). Where the breach consists of an easement which may not be removed by the payment of money, the measure of damages is the depreciation in value of the estate by reason of such encumbrance.⁵⁹

The measure of damages for a temporary deprivation of possession is compensation for the time lost, as in the case of an outstanding term.⁶⁰ Where the grantee was evicted by legal process, and by reason of a subsequent suit the premises have been restored to him, he can no longer recover the purchase money because he is holding under the grant; the recovery is limited to costs of the eviction suit and interest on the purchase money while deprived of possession.⁶¹

(3) Nominal Damages

Grantee in undisturbed possession and suffering no loss may recover only nominal damages for a technical breach of his covenants of title.

A grantee who has not been disturbed in his possession, nor subjected to any inconvenience or expense by reason of a defect in the title conveyed, is entitled to recover only nominal damages for a technical breach of any of the ordinary covenants of title.⁶²

While want of consideration is not, as a rule, a defense to an action for breach of a covenant, see supra § 120, it has been held that, where nothing has been paid as the price of the land, only nominal damages can be recovered;⁶³ but there is authority to the contrary.⁶⁴ Where, however, nothing was paid for land included in the deed by mutual mistake, the damages for failure of title to such lands are nominal.⁶⁵ It has also been held that nominal damages only can be recovered for an eviction due solely to the covenantee's fault, as in failure to pay the purchase money as agreed.⁶⁶

(4) Fraudulent Representations

Vendee induced to purchase by his vendor's fraud as to his title may, on eviction by a better title, recover all of the damages naturally resulting from the fraud.

Where the vendee is induced to purchase by the fraudulent representations of the vendor as to his title, he may, upon eviction by a better title, recover of his vendor all the damages naturally resulting from the fraud, although the land was conveyed by deed with warranty, the action in such case being for fraud and not upon the covenants in the deed.⁶⁷ So, where the eviction of the covenantee has been caused by the fraud of the covenantor, he is entitled to recover the highest value

The liability of the estate of a grantor upon a covenant of warranty in a deed, where a claim of dower has been established by the widow of the grantor against his grantee, is that proportion of one third of the amount paid which the value of the widow's life estate in the assignment made bears to the value of a fee simple.—In re Imblum's Estate, 26 Pa. of the land at any time between his purchase and the commencement of his suit, the action being not for breach of warranty, but for a fraud.⁶⁸

(5) Acquisition of Outstanding Title

(a) By grantor

(b) By grantee

(a) By Grantor

Grantor's subsequent acquisition of title will mitigate damages, or if vendee has not been disturbed, will limit vendee to nominal damages.

The subsequent acquirement of title by the grantor,⁶⁹ or a perfection of title by a decree of court,⁷⁰ may be shown in mitigation of damages in actions for breach of the covenant of seizin, or of warranty,⁷¹ and where grantee has not been disturbed in the enjoyment of the property he will be limited to nominal damages.⁷² Where the grantor acquires title before the damages are assessed, although after the grantee has commenced action for the breach of covenant, it can be shown not in bar of the action, but only in mitigation of damages.⁷³ Where land is sold on credit, and the grantee is ejected by one holding a paramount title which is subsequently purchased by the grantor for the benefit of such grantee, the grantee is entitled to recover for the time that he was deprived of the land.⁷⁴

(b) By Grantee

Ordinarily where covenantee buys in the outstanding title he may recover what he necessarily paid for it, not exceeding the original consideration. Some authorities follow a different rule where there has been an eviction.

Where the covenantee has purchased the outstanding title, his damages for the breach of his vendor's covenant of warranty or for quiet enjoyment or of seizin will be limited to the amount necessarily paid by him for that purpose, including interest, incidental expenses, and reasonable compensation for his trouble, not exceeding in all the purchase price and interest.⁷⁵ The price paid, however, must be reasonable,⁷⁶ and the title purchased must be valid.⁷⁷ Where the grantee extinguishes the paramount title for a nominal consideration, he can recover on the covenant only the amount of such consideration, with reasonable compensation for expenses to which he may have been put in extinguishing it.⁷⁸ In some cases the general rule is apparently limited to cases where the vendor has been guilty of no fraud.⁷⁹

It is claimed by some authorities, however, that a vendee who repurchases the paramount title after eviction is in under a new title, and that therefore the price last paid is no criterion of the damages sustained by failure of the vendor's title.⁸⁰ This rule is inapplicable, however, where the good title is acquired by means of vendee's possession of the imperfect title conferred on him by his vendor.⁸¹

(6) Enhanced Value and Improvements

Ordinarily neither the enhanced value of the property nor the value of improvements thereon is a proper item of damages. However in some jurisdictions this rule does not apply to all covenants of title.

It is the general rule that the enhanced value of the property cannot be taken into consideration in assessing damages for a breach of covenant of title.⁸² In those jurisdictions, however, where for certain covenants of title the value of the land at the time of eviction is the measure of damages it would seem that an increase in value, within the contemplation of the parties, is a proper item of damages.⁸³

In most jurisdictions the value of improvements made by the grantee is not considered as an element of damage in an action for breach of covenant by eviction;⁸⁴ but in some jurisdictions the value of improvements made by the grantee may be recovered,⁸⁵ as far as they have enhanced the rental or usable value of the estate;⁸⁶ but it is otherwise if they were only necessary for the enjoyment of the premises,⁸⁷ or were made after the commencement of a suit to evict,⁸⁸ when it is not shown that the improvements increased the value of the land or benefited the warrantor. Upon a loss of a part of the land upon which there were improvements at the time of conveyance, the damages cannot be confined to the land lost alone, without reference to such improvements; the improvements may be considered in ascertaining the proportionate value of the land lost.⁸⁹ The covenantor is entitled to an allowance for his improvements from the successful claimant;⁹⁰ and, where the covenantee has recovered from the paramount owner the value of such improvements, the covenantor is entitled to credit to that extent in an action for breach of his covenant;⁹¹ but since a grantee may yield to a paramount title without waiting to be evicted, no deduction will be made from the damages to which he would otherwise be entitled by reason of any claim of betterments of which he might have availed himself.⁹² The covenantor can set off the damage sustained by him from the covenantee's appropriation or removal of permanent improvements erected by the covenantor.⁹³

(7) Rents and Profits

Generally rents and profits are not considered in mitigation of damages in actions for breach of covenant.

Although it has been said that, where the covenantee has derived profits from the land conveyed, for which by lapse of time he is no longer responsible, it would seem equitable to deduct from his damages for breach of covenant the profits received by him from such land,⁹⁴ the general rule seems to be that in actions for breach of covenant rents and profits cannot be considered in mitigation of damages,⁹⁵ especially where plaintiff does not claim interest on the purchase money,⁹⁶ unless the covenantor has paid them to the rightful owner of the premises.⁹⁷ It has been held, however, that where grantee reconveys, or tenders a reconveyance, and sues for the purchase money and interest, he must account to the grantor for the rents and profits.⁹⁸ A covenantee may recover for the depreciation in the rental value of his land by reason of the failure of the covenantor to perform a collateral covenant;⁹⁹ and in at least one jurisdiction it has been held that he can recover the value of the fruits and revenues which he has been compelled to return to the true owner.¹

(8) Taxes

Taxes paid by a covenantee are not proper items of damages on an action on a covenant of title nor may a covenantor deduct the amount of taxes paid by him.

Taxes paid by a covenantee or by his grantee are not recoverable upon eviction in an action against the covenantor for breach of his covenant;² nor can a covenantor deduct the amount of taxes paid by him out of the sum recoverable by the covenantee or those claiming under him,³ unless the covenantee has upon eviction recovered such taxes from the paramount owner.⁴

Taxes due before sale. Where a statutory lien for taxes had attached before the date of sale and the sale contract contained no agreement for the payment of taxes for the preceding year, the vendor is liable for the amount of such taxes under his covenant of warranty.⁵ Furthermore, where a grantor warrants that premises are free of all encumbrances, including taxes, and the premises when conveyed are subject to a lien for taxes previously levied, and the grantee pays such taxes, he may recover the amount of money paid.⁶

(9) Evidence of Damages

General rules of evidence control the admissibility of particular evidence on the question of damages for breach of covenants of title.

Any competent evidence which is relevant and material upon the question of damages is admissible;⁷ but where the evidence offered does not directly tend to show the damages under the established rules as to their measure, or raises collateral and irrelevant questions, it should be rejected.⁸

Value of part of tract lost. In an action for breach of covenant by reason of the loss of part of the land conveyed, defendant may prove the proportionate value of the part lost,⁹ at the time of the execution of the deed,¹⁰ and also in mitigation of damages that nothing was in fact paid for such part, that it was included in the deed by mistake, and that it was understood at the time by both parties not to belong to the grantor.¹¹ On the other hand, it is competent for plaintiff to show that the part lost had a peculiar value for certain purposes.¹²

Cost of outstanding title or encumbrance. Upon the assessment of damages, in an action for breach of covenant, it is competent to prove the price paid by plaintiff for an outstanding title, or to remove an encumbrance,¹³ although it has been held that such evidence is inadmissible for the purpose of reducing plaintiff's recovery.¹⁴

§ 143. — Covenant of Seisin

- a. In general
- b. Improvements; enhanced value; profits
- c. Acquisition of outstanding title
- d. Nominal damages

a. In General

For total failure of seisin the value of the consideration paid with interest is the measure of damages; for a partial loss of title the measure is the proportionate part of the consideration represented thereby. In no case can damages exceed the consideration.

As the covenant of seisin is one of the covenants of title, those general rules as to the measure of damages for the breach of such covenants, discussed supra § 142 d, apply to the measurement of damages for its breach.

Total failure of estate. In accordance with the rules just referred to, the measure of damages for a breach of covenant of seisin where there is a total failure of title is the purchase money paid, or the value of the consideration paid,¹⁵ with insisting claims against covenantor when damages were assessed, cannot be recovered by covenantee.—Chicago Mill & Lumber Co. of Cairo v. Townsend, 203 Ill.App. 457.

The theory supporting this measure of damages is that, since the grantor had no title, he conveyed none and the grantor may therefore recover the money paid without consideration.—Murphy v. United States Title Guaranty Co., 172 N.Y.S. 243, 104 Misc. 607.

Reconveyance unnecessary

In an action at law for breach of covenant of seisin, the grantee may recover the full consideration paid, without tendering a deed of the property reconveying the land to its gran-terest, see infra § 149. Another statement of the rule is that the measure of damages is the value of the land as agreed on by the purchase price.¹⁶ It is immaterial that the consideration was property rather than money, except that the value of the property given as consideration must be ascertained.¹⁷ The measure of damages by a remote grantee against the original grantor for a breach of the covenant of seisin has been held to be the amount of the consideration in the original grantor's deed to his grantee, with interest.¹⁸

Partial failure of title. If there is a failure of seisin as to a part of the premises described in the conveyance, the measure of damages is such proportionate or fractional part of the whole consideration paid as the value of the property at the time of the purchase of the part to which the title failed bears to the whole block purchased,¹⁹ with interest thereon, see infra § 149. This rule is limited to conveyances wherein the price for the land sold is by the acre or foot or where the value of the entire tract is uniform; it does not apply where the land is sold for a gross sum and the value of the different tracts is not uniform, some parts being more valuable than others.²⁰ In the latter case the proper measure of damages is the value of the land to which the title failed, so as to compensate for the actual loss sustained by reason of the eviction, not, however, to exceed the amount of the consideration paid.²¹ Similarly the damages which a remote covenantee is entitled to recover for a breach of the covenant of seisin where there is a partial failure of title is the value of the property to which the title failed, not exceeding the consideration paid for the whole.²²

Where a deed undertakes to convey the entire estate in fee, but in fact conveys only a life estate, in his action on the covenant of seisin the purchaser is entitled to recover the difference between the life estate and the fee.²³

Damages limited to consideration or value. Damages recoverable for a total²⁴ or partial²⁵ breach of covenant of seisin cannot exceed the consideration paid or the value of the land at the time of the sale as then agreed on by the parties, or as determined by the price paid with interest.

Fraud. Where the vendee is induced to purchase by the fraudulent representations of the vendor as to title he may, on eviction by a better title, recover of his vendor all damages naturally resulting from the fraud.²⁶

b. Improvements; Enhanced Value; Profits

The covenantee cannot recover for a loss due to general enhancement of value or for improvements. Anticipated profits from resale will not increase the liability of the covenantor nor will a profit on resale mitigate the damages.

The vendee cannot augment his recovery for a breach of a covenant of seisin by showing a rise in the value of the land, whether from a general increase in market price²⁷ or from improvements placed upon the lands by the vendee or his successors in title.²⁸

The fact that the land was bought for a particular purpose, as for resale, will not, in the absence

Not required to accept less

Equity rule inapplicable

Obviously the equity rules requiring a vendor to account for taxes paid and improvements made by the vendee cannot support the latter's claim for profits lost because of a breach of covenant of seisin as such profits in no way inure to the benefit of defendants as vendors of complainants.—North v. Brittain, 291 S.W. 1071, 154 Tenn. 661, 61 A.L.R. 6.

of fraud, have the effect of increasing the liability.²⁹ The covenantor may not show in mitigation of damages for a failure of seizin to a part of a tract that plaintiff, a remote grantee, had realized a profit on the sale of that part to which title had not failed over the price which he had paid for the entire tract.³⁰

Only nominal damages are recoverable where the covenantor subsequently perfects title and covenantee suffers no actual loss. Where the covenantee buys in the outstanding title he may recover what he has necessarily paid for it.

Where the covenantor perfects title in himself which, under his covenant, will inure to the benefit of the grantee, damages for the breach of the covenant of seizin will be nominal, where the vendee has not been disturbed in the enjoyment of the property.³¹

Acquisition by grantee. Where covenantee buys in an outstanding paramount title the measure of damages in an action for breach of the covenant of seizin in his deed is the reasonable price which he has fairly and necessarily paid for such title, not to exceed the original consideration paid by him.³²

By subvendee. The vendee's recovery for breach of covenant of seizin is not limited to the amount his subvendee may have paid to perfect his title.³³

d. Nominal Damages

Only nominal damages are allowable for a breach without eviction or positive injury.

A grantee in undisturbed possession may recover only nominal damages for a mere technical breach of the covenant of seizin³⁴ until he has been evicted³⁵ or suffers some other positive injury.³⁶ It has been held to be no mere technical breach where grantor at the time of the execution of the deed is not in fact or in law seized of the premises to which the covenant relates and an action for substantial damages is held to accrue immediately on the delivery of the deed.³⁷

If covenantee's title is perfected by the statute of limitations he is entitled to recover only nominal damages.³⁸

§ 144. — Covenant of Right to Convey

The consideration paid with interest is ordinarily the measure of damages for a total breach of the covenant of right to convey, a proportional recovery being permitted for a partial breach. Nominal damages only can be recovered for a technical breach.

In accordance with the rules governing damages for breach of covenants of title generally, which are discussed supra § 142, the measure of damages upon a breach of the covenant of right to convey resulting in a total loss of the estate conveyed is ordinarily the consideration paid,³⁹ with

Mere cloud on title

Where damages were sought for a breach of covenant of the seizin on the ground that the mineral rights in land had been conveyed, and plaintiff failed to show that ore existed in commercial quantity on the land and the rights under deed which was forty years old had never been exercised, damages will be denied, since the deed was a mere cloud on title which could be removed at small expense compared with the amount sought to be recovered.—Black v. Cure of breach

In a case where there was at most a mere technical breach of a covenant of seizin which was practically cured before suit was brought at plaintiff's request and without expense to him, he may recover only nominal damages.—Perkins v. August, 146 A. 831, 109 Conn. 452.

interest, as discussed infra § 149, and costs and expenses of litigation, as discussed infra § 150. Where, however, the consideration cannot be ascertained, the measure of damages, at least in some jurisdictions, is the value of the land at the time of the intended conveyance.⁴⁰ Where the covenant relates to a fee and the covenantor has a right to convey a life estate only, the covenantee is entitled to the difference between the value of a life estate and an estate in fee simple in the land, not, however, exceeding the amount of the purchase money paid for the land.⁴¹ Similarly, if a title is found defective as to a part of the land, the vendee is entitled to damages for that part lost according to its relative value to the whole tract at the time of the conveyance.⁴² If there has been a technical breach only, and the covenantee has lost nothing, he can recover no more than nominal damages.⁴³

§ 145. — Covenants against Encumbrances

- a. In general
- b. Nominal damages
- c. Unexpired lease as encumbrance
- d. Encumbrances permanent in nature

a. In General

The measure of damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances is generally the loss actually sustained by the covenantee with interest. Where the breach amounts to a failure of title, the consideration money or, as held in some cases, the value of the land at the time of eviction, is the measure, while a covenantee who extinguishes the encumbrance can recover the amount reasonably paid for such purpose, not exceeding, however, the amount paid the covenantor, or the value of the estate. Special damages are ordinarily not recoverable.

As a general rule the measure of damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances is the loss actually sustained by the covenantee,⁴⁴ with interest, as shown infra § 149. Thus, where the breach resulting from an encumbrance amounts to a failure of title, the measure of damages is the consideration money,⁴⁵ or, as is held in some cases, the value of the land at the time of the eviction,⁴⁶ with interest and costs and expenses of litigation, in accordance with the rules discussed infra in §§ 149-150.

While a covenantee is not ordinarily bound to buy in an outstanding title or encumbrance to prevent eviction,⁴⁷ even where it is offered to him on moderate terms,⁴⁸ yet, in an action for breach of a covenant against encumbrance, where the encumbrance has been obtained or removed by purchase, plaintiff is entitled to recover the amount which he fairly and reasonably paid for that purpose,⁴⁹ with interest, as stated infra § 149, and, according to some authorities, with compensation

Partial assumption of encumbrance by grantee

Where the grantee has, as a part of the consideration, agreed to pay for his trouble and expenses.⁵⁰ It must appear, however, that such payment was reasonably and fairly made,⁵¹ mere proof of payment being insufficient;⁵² and the amount paid must not exceed the amount paid by the covenantor to the covenantor,⁵³ with interest,⁵⁴ or the value of the estate,⁵⁵ although neither of these last mentioned limitations have been recognized as applicable to all cases.⁵⁶ While such purchase may be made after the commencement of the action,⁵⁷ the covenantor cannot enlarge the amount of his recovery by delay until after foreclosure.⁵⁸ A covenantor is not bound by an allowance of damages made in a third party's action against his covenantor.⁵⁹

Remote or special damage. Damages, costs, and expenses, when given as a penalty for breach of a covenant against encumbrances, mean the necessary, natural, and proximate damages resulting from such nonperformance, and not some remote, accidental, or special injury to the party to whom the right of action accrues;⁶⁰ hence speculative damages will not be given,⁶¹ and the diminished value of an estate, in consequence of an encumbrance upon it, is not the measure of damages, unless the estate was purchased by the grantee for the purpose of making a resale, and that fact was communicated to or known by the grantor.⁶²

Evidence. In a suit for damages on a covenant against encumbrances, evidence of the enhanced value of the land by reason of the encumbrance,⁶³ or evidence of plaintiff's object in purchasing,⁶⁴ is inadmissible, unless it formed part of the consideration;⁶⁵ and, where nominal damages only are recoverable, evidence of the difference in the value of the land with and without the encumbrance is inadmissible.⁶⁶

b. Nominal Damages

While any breach of a covenant against encumbrances will as a rule entitle the covenantor to at least nominal damages, substantial damages can ordinarily be recovered only upon proof of actual loss.

While any breach of a covenant against encumbrances will generally entitle the covenantor to at least nominal damages,⁶⁷ substantial damages can a certain sum toward the removal of an encumbrance not excepted from the covenant, and subsequently pays off the encumbrance before its maturity for a greater sum, he is entitled to recover the amount so paid less the amount assumed by him.—Corbett v. Wrenn, 35 P. 658, 25 Or. 305—15 C.J. p 1336 note 24.

Set-off

A grantee in a deed, with covenants against encumbrances, who permits a lien for money then due for taxes to mature into absolute title in the state is entitled in a suit by the vendor for the purchase price to set off the entire amount he had to pay the state in order to get title.—*William Farrell Lumber Co. v. Misstating amount of encumbrance; action by assignee

Where, however, there was prima facie no liability growing out of a mortgage subject to which a conveyance was made to a covenantor, the assignee of such covenantor, who was seeking to recover for a misstatement of the amount due on the mortgage, could not even recover nominal damages without showing be recovered only upon proof of actual loss.⁶⁸ Accordingly, it may be stated as a general rule, subject, however, to the limitations hereinafter stated, that a grantee under a deed, who has not been disturbed in his possession and who has not paid the encumbrance, can recover no more than nominal damages for the breach of a covenant against encumbrances resulting from the existence of a mortgage or other money lien.⁶⁹ Thus an inchoate right of dower in the premises,⁷⁰ or a consummate right of dower which has not been enforced,⁷¹ is ground for nominal damages only. Similarly, where the encumbrance is in the nature of an easement or right of way which is not only not injurious to the land, but rather a benefit no substantial damages can be recovered for the breach.⁷² So too, in the absence of a valid statute to the contrary, where the encumbrance is removed by the grantor without expense or trouble to the grantee the latter can recover only nominal damages.⁷³ It should be noted, however, that the general rule that grantee who has not been disturbed in his possession and who has not paid the encumbrance is entitled to nominal damages only, has been limited in its application to an encumbrance in the nature of a money charge, such as a mortgage, judgment assessment, or tax.⁷⁴ Further, the rule has been said not to be controlling in equity,⁷⁵ and will not be applied where the reason for its application no longer exists.⁷⁶

In the absence of special circumstances, the measure of damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances by reason of an outstanding lease is the value of the use of the premises during the remainder of the unexpired term, or for the time the grantee is kept out of possession.

Reasons for rule

(1) "The principle of this rule is that a covenant against encumbrances is treated as a contract of indemnity, and although broken as soon as made, if broken at all, nevertheless a recovery, beyond nominal damages, is confined to the actual loss sustained by the grantee by reason of the payment or enforcement of the incumbrance against the property."—Lauer v. Maga, 1 N.Y.S.2d 743, 745.

(2) "The doctrine . . . is founded upon the possibility of the mortgagee recovering on the personal covenant of the mortgagor."—Johnson v. Blumer, 197 N.W. 340, 343, 183 Wis. 369, rehearing denied 198 N.W. 277, 187 Wis. 369.

Damages resulting from breach of covenant against encumbrances by easements generally see subdivision d of this section infra.

The reason for the rule is that such easements, unless they do effect injury and damage, are not encumbrances at all; they do not carry a pecuniary obligation on the part of the covenantee, and are not liens against the property; they affect its physical condition, and presumably were considered by the purchaser in making the price.—Walcott v. Kershner, Tex.Com.App., 291 S.W. 195, reversing Kershner v. Walcott, Civ App., 285 S.W. 902.

eral rule is that the measure of damages for breach of a covenant against encumbrances by reason of an outstanding lease is the value of the use of the premises,⁷⁷ which is ordinarily the rental value,⁷⁸ during the remainder of the unexpired term, or for the time the grantee is kept out of possession.⁷⁹ The rule is otherwise, however, where special circumstances exist,⁸⁰ in which case the damage should be estimated according to the real injury caused by the existence of the encumbrance.⁸¹ In no event, however, should the grantee be permitted to recover both the rental value of the premises which he is prevented from occupying, and the rental value of the premises he does occupy, during the time that he is deprived of possession.⁸² While rent received by the grantee under the lease may be a proper deduction from the damages found upon breach of the covenant,⁸³ the grantee is not responsible for rent not collected under the tenancy.⁸⁴

Damages, where a covenant against encumbrances breached by the existence of an encumbrance of a permanent nature, not removable at the will of the covenantee, may be measured by the difference between the value of the land without the encumbrance and with it, not exceeding, however, the consideration paid, or the moneys reasonably expended in extinguishing the burden. Where an easement is beneficial to other portions of the land, such benefit may be considered in assessing the damages arising from the easement.

Where a covenant against encumbrances breached by the existence of an encumbrance of a permanent nature, not removable at the will of the covenantee, as, for instance, an outstanding servitude or easement in the land, the damages are that amount of money which is a just compensation to the covenantee for the real injury resulting from the encumbrance.⁸⁵ Such damages may be measured by the difference between the value of the land without the servitude and with it, not exceeding, however, the consideration paid for the property,⁸⁷ or by the moneys reasonably e

Moving expenses

Damages may not be recovered for moving expenses of plaintiff incurred by reason of his inability to obtain possession of the dwelling house on the premises.—Klippel v. Borngesser, supra.

In Illinois, however, the measure of damages is the difference between the purchase price of the premises and the amount of their depreciation in value, if any, because of the lease; and an instruction that a grantee is entitled to the fair cash rental value of the premises from the time possession was promised up to the time the grantee obtained possession is improper.—Sizemore v. Encroachment of purchased building on public street, being in nature of public nuisance, is encumbrance of a permanent nature which cannot be removed by money payment, because municipal authorities would have no right to sell land encroached on, nor to continue its existence if money consideration, and grant was therefore entitled to decrease value of land because of encumbrance.—Hansen v. Pattberg, 208 Y.S. 866, 212 App.Div. 49.

87. Ala.—Colson v. Harden, 141 S. 639, 224 Ala. 665.

When there is no failure of title to any part of land, but encumbrance exists on part created by prior conveyance of right to enter and cut "saw timber," measure of damages against covenantor against encumbrances is diminished value of entire tract, not exceeding entire purchase money paid with interest.—Blankenship v. Lanier, 101 So. 76, 212 Ala. 60.

Outstanding estate in remainder

The covenantee of freedom from encumbrance, on breach through outstanding estate in remainder, was entitled to recover of the covenantor the difference in value of the life estate in the land validly conveyed as an estate in fee simple, not exceeding the amount of the purchase money paid.—Mixon v. Burleson, 82 S. 98, 203 Ala. 84.

pended by the owner in freeing the land and extinguishing the burden,⁸⁸ together with the injury sustained between the date of the deed and the removal of the encumbrance.⁸⁹ While the relative value of the land is to be ascertained as of the time of the conveyance, and not as of the time of the trial,⁹⁰ the fact that the encumbrance is perpetual may properly be taken into consideration in assessing the damages.⁹¹ On the other hand, where an easement is of benefit to other portions of the land, as in case of a railroad or drainage right of way, the benefits accruing to such other portions by reason of its existence should be considered in estimating the damages arising from the easement,⁹² but not such benefits as were common to other lands in the vicinity not occupied by the railroad,⁹³ nor the benefit accruing to adjoining land owned by the grantee,⁹⁴ and it has been held that, where the vendee admits that the general market value of his land is enhanced by reason of the dedication by his vendor of a part of the land as streets and alleys, he cannot recover damages therefor merely because one to whom he has subsequently sold the land for a particular purpose has recovered damages from him.⁹⁵ However, where the encumbrance consists of a party-wall agreement which, in addition to giving that and the adjoining lot mutual easements each in the other, constituted a lien on the lot conveyed for half of the cost of the wall, the value of the easement rights of the lot may not be offset in diminution of damages against the amount which the grantees had to pay in the removal of such lien encumbrance.⁹⁶

§ 146. — Covenant for Quiet Enjoyment

Generally the measure of damages for breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, where there has been a total eviction, is the purchase price paid or the value of the consideration, although the rule may be varied by the conditions of the particular case. Where the covenant has extinguished an adverse title he can recover the amount necessarily expended for that purpose, not exceeding in all the purchase price and interest.

In accordance with the rules governing damages for breach of covenants of title generally, which are discussed supra § 142, the measure of damages for breach of a covenant for quiet enjoyment, where there is an eviction from the whole of the land conveyed, is generally the purchase price paid, or the value of the consideration,⁹⁷ with interest and costs and expenses of litigation, as discussed infra §§ 149-150. Such amount may be varied, however, by conditions existing in the particular case;⁹⁸ and the rule in some jurisdictions is that the value of the estate at the time of the eviction is the measure of damages when the covenant is in the future.⁹⁹ Where the covenant has extinguished the adverse title, his recovery will be limited to the amount necessarily paid by him for that purpose, not exceeding in all the purchase price and interest.¹

In the absence of actual injury resulting from refusal to execute a covenant for further assurance, only nominal damages are recoverable therefor.

Unless actual injury is shown to have been sustained by reason of refusal to execute a covenant for further assurance, only nominal damages are recoverable therefor.²

§ 148. — Covenant of Warranty

a. In general

b. Upon acquisition of outstanding title

a. In General

The measure of damages for a total breach of a covenant of warranty is, although there are some diverse views, generally the consideration paid, or the value of the land as measured by the purchase price; and, where the breach is partial, only a proportional recovery may be had. Special damages are not ordinarily recoverable; and only nominal damages may be recovered for a technical breach.

In accordance with the rules governing covenants of title generally, which are discussed supra § 142, the general rule is that where the breach of a covenant of warranty results in a total loss of the estate conveyed the measure of damages is the consideration paid, or the value of the land as measured by the purchase price,³ with interest, as stated infra § 149, and costs and expenses of litigation, in accordance with the rules discussed infra § 150. The general rule is not universal, however, compensation for the actual injury sustained being awarded under some decisions;⁴ and in some jurisdictions the measure of damages is the value of the estate at the time of the eviction.⁵ Furthermore, where the eviction is by reason of an outstanding mortgage, which may be redeemed and removed, the measure of damages, at least in some jurisdictions, is the amount necessary to pay and remove such encumbrance, with interest, if that is less than the value of the estate,⁶ although this rule is inapplicable if the encumbrance exceeds the value of the estate,⁷ and it has no application where the measure of damages is governed by a statute providing a different rule.⁸

While it has been held, upon a partial breach of a covenant of warranty, that the covenantee is entitled to the reasonable value of the land as to which title has failed,⁹ the general rule is that the covenantee can recover only such part of the original purchase price or consideration as bears the same ratio to the whole consideration that the value of the land to which title has failed bears to the value of the whole premises.¹⁰ Thus, where a

Where consideration not pecuniary

(1) When land to which title has failed has been exchanged for personality or other land without a stipulated value, the recovery should be the value of the personality or other land rather than the value of the land to which title failed.—*Wiggins v. Time for, and manner of, determining value

(1) The amount of recovery must be based on the value of the land at the time of its sale.—Crowell & Spencer Lumber Co. v. Hawkins, 179 So. 21, 189 La. 18, annulling 174 So. 151—15 C.J. p 1322 note 5.

(2) However, it has been said that the measure of damages for breach of warranty is the value of that which was lost at the time of its loss, and, if the warranty was breached in the making, the value at that time.—Wilder v. Tatum, 73 So. 833, 15 Ala.App. 474.

(3) Such value must, in absence of fraud, be determined with regard to price fixed by parties rather than to value of bargain, although parties may show peculiar circumstances making part as to which title failed of greater or less value than part actually conveyed.—Krein v. Steigerwald, 193 A. 390, 128 Pa.Super. 51.

As against an undisclosed principal, the measure of damages must be the extent to which defendant was enriched at the expense of the purchaser, who bought from him through his agent.—Donner v. Whitecotton, 212 S.W. 378, 201 Mo.App. 443.

person by a covenantee, under an agreement of compromise, may be recovered in an action against his covenantor,²⁰ a covenantee cannot, by such an agreement, enlarge his claim for damages against his covenantor,²¹ and if, in the compromise, he paid more than the law would have exacted, he cannot recover the excess, but only so much as he was legally bound to pay.²² In an action by one or more grantees in common for breach of the covenant of warranty plaintiffs may recover only so far as their own interests extend.²³

Special damages are not ordinarily recoverable in an action for a breach of warranty of title.²⁴

Nominal damages. While any breach of a covenant of warranty will ordinarily entitle a covenantee to at least nominal damages,²⁵ where the breach is a mere technical one, only nominal damages are recoverable;²⁶ and not even nominal damages will be allowed where plaintiff's petition is expressly limited to a prayer for special damages.²⁷ However, a covenantee is not limited to nominal damages merely because of the fact that, after a subsequent conveyance of the property, his sub-vendee perfects his own title by purchasing the outstanding title.²⁸

b. Upon Acquisition of Outstanding Title

In the absence of fraud on the part of the vendor, the measure of damages for breach of a covenant of warranty, where the covenantee has extinguished the outstanding title is generally limited to the amount necessarily paid by him for that purpose, not exceeding in all the purchase price and interest. The subsequent perfection of title by the grantor for the grantee's benefit may be shown in mitigation of damages.

As a general rule, where a covenantee has extinguished the outstanding title, his damages for the breach of his vendor's covenant of warranty will, at least where the vendor has been guilty of no fraud,²⁹ be limited to the amount necessarily paid by him for that purpose,³⁰ with interest, as shown infra § 149, and costs and expenses of litigation, as discussed infra § 150, not exceeding in all the purchase price and interest.³¹ The price paid must, however, be reasonable,³² the title purchased must be valid,³³ and a warrantee cannot recover the expense of making the title good of record when it was already actually good by readily available and undisputed facts in pais.³⁴ Moreover,

Where bank executed warranty deed, grantee thereunder executed second warranty deed, grantee under second deed discovered that forfeit-

where the covenant is for a fee, and a life estate only passes by the deed, the value of the life estate should be deducted from the amount necessarily paid for purchasing the outstanding title.³⁵ While a covenantee may, under some circumstances, as, for instance, where he acquires a title entirely new and different from that of his original vendor, be entitled to recover the original purchase price paid such vendor,³⁶ the rule is otherwise where his title is acquired by means of the possession or imperfect title conferred upon him by his vendor.³⁷

The subsequent acquirement or perfection of title by the grantor for the benefit of the grantee may be shown in mitigation of damages in an action for breach of the covenant of warranty.³⁸

Acquisition of outstanding title as affecting damages for breach of covenants of title generally is discussed supra § 142.

§ 149. — Interest

Interest is usually allowed in actions for breach of covenants upon a recovery by the covenantee. There is some difference in the decisions as to the time from which interest may run.

As a general rule, upon a recovery by a covenantee in an action for breach of a covenant, interest is allowed upon the consideration paid,³⁹ or upon the value of the property to which the title has failed;⁴⁰ and, where the covenantee has purchased or extinguished the outstanding title, interest is usually allowed on the amount reasonably and necessarily paid by him for that purpose.⁴¹ Payments of interest on deferred payments of the consideration are recoverable as part of the consideration,⁴² and interest upon reasonable costs incurred in defending title is also allowable under some circumstances,⁴³ although the contrary may be true as to interest on the costs in an eviction suit,⁴⁴ at least where it is not shown that such costs have been paid.⁴⁵

Where grantor in warranty deed breached covenant against encumbrances, in that a lease existed, and collected the rental for the ensuing year, to which grantee was entitled, the grantee in an action to recover such rental was entitled to interest on the amount of the rent.—Winn v. Taylor, 190 P. 342, 98 Or. 556, affirmed 194 P. 857, 98 Or. 556.

There is some difference in the decisions as to the time from which interest should run, interest from the time of the conveyance⁴⁶ or payment of the purchase price⁴⁷ being the rule under some decisions, while under others the interest is calculated from the time of eviction,⁴⁸ or from the date of judgment.⁴⁹ In many decisions a distinction is made based upon the benefit derived by the covenantor from the occupancy of the premises, it being held, where the covenantor has derived such a benefit, that he is entitled to interest on the purchase money only for such period before eviction as he is liable to pay or has paid the true owner for mesne profits,⁵⁰ although he is entitled in such case to interest from the time of eviction,⁵¹ irrespective of whether the rents and profits which he has enjoyed are more or less than the interest on the purchase money.⁵² On the other hand, if he has received no benefit from the land,⁵³ as in the case of wild land incapable of producing rent,⁵⁴ or has not secured possession by reason of an outstanding paramount title at the date of his purchase,⁵⁵ the interest is to be computed from the date of the conveyance.

Where the failure of title is only partial, interest is calculated upon a proportional part.⁵⁶

Rate of interest. The interest allowed is to be computed at the legal rate.⁵⁷ Simple interest only may be recovered; rests are not allowed.⁵⁸

a. In General

Subject to certain qualifications, costs and expenses of litigation reasonably and necessarily incurred by a covenantee in defending his title are generally recoverable by him in an action for breach of covenant.

As a general rule, costs and expenses of litigation reasonably and necessarily incurred by a covenantee in defending his title are recoverable by him in an action for breach of covenant,⁵⁹ especially, as stated in subdivision c of this section, infra, or at least, where the covenantor is notified of the pendency of the action and requested to defend. The general rule is not without exceptions, however, being applicable only where a direct attack is made on the title;⁶⁰ and a covenantee can recover no expenses incurred in maintaining or defending an action based on an unfounded claim.⁶¹ Furthermore, it has been held that the general rule does not apply where the covenantor had no seizin at the time of his conveyance;⁶² where the vendor and purchaser by express contract had fixed the amount of the vendor's liability for loss of the land;⁶³ or where the expenses were unreasonably incurred,⁶⁴ or were incurred in defending title to lands not a part of those conveyed by the covenantor,⁶⁵ as where they were incurred in unsuccessfully defending a suit for possession of a part of the land which was erroneously omitted from, or embraced in, the description of the premises,⁶⁶ or where, as considered infra subdivision c of this section, they were incurred in defending a suit by the holder of the paramount title without having notified or called on the covenantor to defend. In an action on a covenant to refund the purchase money, a covenantee cannot recover costs paid by him in unsuccessfully resisting an eviction;⁶⁷ nor can he, in an action for breach of a covenant of seizin, recover the expense of a suit against him by one with whom he had negotiated an exchange of the premises to compel a reconveyance of the property exchanged.⁶⁸ A distinction has also been drawn where the costs are incurred by a covenantee in defending his title and where he himself sues to clear his title, it being held that in the latter case he cannot recover from the covenantor the costs and expenses which he incurs,⁶⁹ as for instance costs and expenses incurred by him in a suit to remove an apparent cloud from his title,⁷⁰ although an exception to this rule has been recognized where the successful claimant by entering on the land

In an action on a covenant to refund the purchase money, a covenantee cannot recover costs paid by him in unsuccessfully resisting an eviction;⁶⁷ nor can he, in an action for breach of a covenant of seizin, recover the expense of a suit against him by one with whom he had negotiated an exchange of the premises to compel a reconveyance of the property exchanged.⁶⁸ A distinction has also been drawn where the costs are incurred by a covenantee in defending his title and where he himself sues to clear his title, it being held that in the latter case he cannot recover from the covenantor the costs and expenses which he incurs,⁶⁹ as for instance costs and expenses incurred by him in a suit to remove an apparent cloud from his title,⁷⁰ although an exception to this rule has been recognized where the successful claimant by entering on the land

Express agreement unnecessary

In an action for breach of covenant of warranty in a deed, the grantee may recover costs and necessary expenses incurred in a bona fide defense or assertion of his title, although grantor did not expressly agree to pay such expenses.—Rennie v. Gibson, 183 P. 483, 75 Okl. 282.

Expenses incurred in getting possession

(1) Reasonable costs and expenses incurred by a covenantee in getting possession of the lands, as, for instance, costs of an ejectment suit against a third party in possession, are ordinarily recoverable by him in an action for breach of covenant of seizin or warranty.

forces the purchaser to bring an action to test his title.⁷¹ Again it has been held that, if it is plain that the defense is useless, and the covenantee has been notified not to defend by his immediate grantor who acknowledges liability on his covenants, costs and expenses cannot be recovered by the covenantee in an action against a remote grantor;⁷² but the correctness of this rule has been questioned.⁷³ While it has been held that costs of an unsuccessful appeal are not recoverable where not taken at the vendor's request,⁷⁴ the contrary is true if the vendor has authorized the appeal,⁷⁵ and it has been held that such costs can be recovered notwithstanding an appeal had previously been taken by the covenantor.⁷⁶ A plaintiff cannot recover the costs paid by him in a suit brought against him by his grantee on his covenant.⁷⁷

b. Attorney's Fees

While reasonable attorney's fees expended by a covenantee in good faith in defending his title are recoverable by him in an action on the covenant in some jurisdictions, in others fees beyond those included in the taxed costs are not allowed.

There is some conflict in the decisions as to the right of a covenantee to recover attorney's fees from his covenantor.⁷⁸ In many jurisdictions reasonable attorney's fees expended by a covenantee in good faith in defending his title are recoverable by him in an action on the covenant,⁷⁹ especially, as pointed out in subdivision c of this section infra, or at least, where the covenantor has been notified of the pendency of the action and requested to defend. In other jurisdictions, however, fees beyond those included in the taxed costs are not allowed;⁸⁰ and attorney's fees are, of course, not recoverable in those instances in which the general expenses and costs of litigation are not allowed.⁸¹

Where allowed, the attorney's fees must have been incurred in a proceeding directly and necessarily affecting the title of the covenantor,⁸² and concerning land included in the covenant.⁸³ A covenantee against whom a judgment has been rendered in favor of his grantee on his covenants cannot recover his attorney's fees in such suit in an action against his own covenantor for the same breach.⁸⁴ Counsel fees in the action against the covenantor,⁸⁵ or in an action wherein the respective rights of the covenantor and covenantee only are in issue,⁸⁶ are ordinarily not recoverable, at least in the absence of any bad faith, deceit, or fraud on the part of the covenantor.⁸⁷ Such fees may, however, be authorized by statute.⁸⁸

To entitle a covenantee to recover attorney's fees, he must show that the fees have in fact been paid,⁸⁹ or that he is under obligation to pay some specific amount,⁹⁰ although it has been held that the grantee is not necessarily entitled to recover the fee

c. Notice to Covenantor as Affecting Right

Under some decisions, the covenantor's liability for costs and expenses of litigation reasonably and necessarily incurred by the covenantee in defending his title depends on whether the covenantor has been notified of the pendency of the action and requested to defend.

The rule that costs and expenses of litigation,⁹² including reasonable attorney's fees,⁹³ necessarily incurred by a covenantee in defending his title are recoverable by him in an action for breach of covenant, is especially applicable where the covenantor has been notified of the pendency of the action and requested to defend. Furthermore, under some decisions the liability of the covenantor for such costs and expenses is expressly made dependent on such notice, the rule being that if he has been notified he is liable,⁹⁴ otherwise he is not,⁹⁵ except perhaps on proof that the claim defended against was valid,⁹⁶ or in cases of the warrantor's fraud or absence from the state.⁹⁷ On the other hand, it has been held that a covenantor is not liable, although notice has been given;⁹⁸ and also that he is liable, although no notice has been given.⁹⁹ Counsel fees incurred by the covenantee, after notice to the covenantor and the assumption of the defense by him, are not recoverable in an action on the covenants;¹ and the same is true where the covenantor, although not notified, becomes aware of the adversary action, and at once employs competent counsel to defend it.²

3. U.S.—U. S. v. Burnell, D.C.Iowa, 75 F. 824, 829.

In its mechanical sense, the word implies an opening and closing, and imports a movable part.⁴

Metaphorically, according to one of its usually accepted meanings, a deposit made with a broker to secure him from being out of pocket in the event of the stocks falling against his client, and the client's not paying the difference.⁵

Phrases: "Cover note,"⁶ and "cover note, binding slip, certificate, or memorandum."⁷

As a Verb

—In General. In its primary sense, to enfold, envelop, enwrap, extend over, inclose, lay or set over, overlap, overlay, overspread, protect, or shelter;⁸ more specifically, to envelop the surface or whole body, to lay or place one thing on or over another so as to protect, screen, conceal or hide it,⁹ and, in a derived or secondary sense, to be coextensive with, equal or equivalent to, or of the same extent or amount, to compensate for, or counterbalance.¹⁰ In a particular connection, "cover" means to "insure."¹¹

Covered into the treasury. A phrase used in acts of congress and practice of the United States treasury department meaning that money has actually been paid into the treasury in the regular manner, as distinguished from merely depositing it with the treasurer.¹²

Not covered. A phrase which, as applied to a check or draft, has been construed as equivalent to not paid or unpaid.¹³

Other phrases: "Cover one's loss,"¹⁴ and "receipts do not cover the expenses;"¹⁵ also "'covered by' a prior mortgage,"¹⁶ "covered by insurance,"¹⁷ "covered crib or heart,"¹⁸ "covered swimming bath,"¹⁹ "holding the risk covered,"²⁰ "land covered with water,"²¹ "properly covered,"²² and "where such flights [of steps] 'shall not be covered.'"²³

—Covering. As a verbal noun, anything which covers or conceals, as a roof, a screen, a wrapper, clothing, etc.²⁴

As used in Tariff Acts, see the C.J.S. title Customs Duties § 46, also 17 C.J. p 584 note 52—p 586 note 71.

Phrases: "Coverings of any kind;"²⁵ and also, adjectively, "covering deed."²⁶

COVERAGE. As an insurance term see the C.J.S. title Insurance § 49.

Phrases: "Within the coverage of the policy;"²⁷ and also "restricted to the coverages."²⁸

implied or inferred, as a covert condition.³⁰ In another sense, married, under the disability of marriage.³¹

COVERTURE. The condition or state of a woman while under the protection of her husband.³² Sometimes used elliptically to describe the legal disability arising from such state,³³ and in this sense defined as meaning a personal disability, springing from the conjugal relation;³⁴ the legal condition of a married woman.³⁵

During coverture. While the marriage lasts.³⁶ In a particular connection, it has been said that the term refers to coverture between a decedent spouse and surviving spouse and does not include the coverture of a prior marriage between the decedent and some other spouse.³⁷

COVIN. A contrivance between two to defraud or cheat a third;³⁸ a secret contrivance between two or more persons to defraud and prejudice another of his rights.³⁹

COVINOUS. Deceitful, or having the nature of, or tainted by, covin.⁴⁰

COW.

As a Noun

The female of bovine animals.⁴¹ While in its general and ordinary sense the term means a mature female of bovine animals,⁴² it may be used in a broader sense as including a heifer,⁴³ unless the context or intent prevents such a liberal construction.⁴⁴ Further, in a very broad sense the term is sometimes used as including all bovine animals,⁴⁵ but although colloquially "cow" may be, and under particular circumstances has been, employed as a generic term denoting animals of the cattle or cow kind,⁴⁶ yet, strictly speaking, it is distinguished from the true generic term which is "bos," see Bos 11 C.J.S. p 529 note 11. In particular connections, "cow" has been construed as referring to, or as including, a bull, see 12 C.J.S. p 557 note 27, a cow's calf,⁴⁷ a heifer or cow fourteen months old which had been bred,⁴⁸ and a milch cow.⁴⁹ "Cow," has, itself, been held included within the meaning of various other terms.⁵⁰

Compared with, or distinguished from: "Bull" see 12 C.J.S. p 557 note 28, "ox,"⁵¹ and "steer."⁵²

Milch cow. A cow giving, or in, milk, or kept for her milk.⁵³ Moreover, in a particular connection, the term has been held to refer to cows suitable for, intended to be used for, and kept for, milch cows, regardless of whether at the time they are actually giving milk, and the term so used, may refer to a milch cow, temporarily dry, and to a heifer which

CRAFT.

As Cunning

In this sense, the term is not a legal one, although often used in connection with such terms as "fraud" and "artifice," and defined as meaning guile; artful cunning; trickiness.⁷¹

As Trade or Occupation

Manual occupation; some mechanic art in which the person practicing may acquire and exhibit dexterity and skill;⁷² the occupation or employment itself, a trade;⁷³ also the body of persons pursuing such a calling,⁷⁴ hence a guild.⁷⁵

As Nautical Term

A vessel; ordinarily applied to water transporting conveyances of small character, generally engaged in coastwise or domestic navigation,⁷⁶ although the term is sometimes used to embrace vessels of all sizes, especially all kinds of sailing vessels.⁷⁷ It has been held to include a small pleasure boat, without deck, propelled by a small steam engine.⁷⁸

Water craft. A term applicable to the means of transportation by water,⁷⁹ and defined by Webster International Dictionary as meaning any vessel or boat plying on water; vessels and boats collectively.⁸⁰ Ordinarily, the term is applied to small vessels engaged in coastwise or domestic navigation,⁸¹ but it may be applied to a houseboat drawn up on the beach,⁸² and to a wharf boat,⁸³ although it has been said that the term does not include a dredge.⁸⁴

CRAFTSMAN. One who practices a handicraft.⁸⁶

CRAMP. A common term well understood to relate to a painful affection of the muscles, and frequently associated with an acute disease of the stomach or bowels; a sudden, involuntary, and highly painful contraction of a muscle or muscles; a variety of tonic spasm; and it has been said that it is most frequently experienced in the lower extremities, and is a common symptom of certain affections, as of colica pictonum and cholera morbus. Several of these painful contractions generally occur successively, so that the word "cramps" is used to designate the disease.⁸⁷

Cramp of the stomach. A sudden, violent, and most painful affection of the stomach, with sense of constriction in the epigastrium.⁸⁸

Cramp cure. A term descriptive of the purpose and character of a medicine.⁸⁹

CRANE. Sometimes called a "traveler;"⁹⁰ and defined by the Standard Dictionary as meaning a hoisting machine having the added capacity of moving a load in a horizontal or lateral direction.⁹¹ Even when operated by hand, it has been held to be a "machine."⁹²

like, and his opportunities and means of knowledge, would be likely to testify to the truth;⁹² a competent witness, as well as one worthy of belief.⁹³ It has been said that one who lacks knowledge on the subject under investigation is not a credible person to be accepted as worthy of belief in that particular inquiry;⁹⁴ and where it appears that a person's means of knowledge are not sufficient to support the statements made in an affidavit, he is not a credible person within the statutory meaning of the term.⁹⁵

Credible witness. As equivalent to "competent witness" and as meaning one who, being competent to testify, is deemed worthy of belief, see the C.J.S. titles Wills § 185, also 68 C.J. p 674 note 42-p 675 note 55, and 15 C.J. p 1347 note 17-20, Witnesses § 458, also 15 C.J. p 1347 note 30-p 1348 note 55, and as used in perjury prosecutions see the C.J.S. title Perjury § 69, also 48 C.J. p 902 note 53.

Other phrases: "Credible attesting witnesses,"⁹⁶ "credible evidence,"⁹⁷ and "disinterested and credible."⁹⁸

CREDIBLY. The statement, as in a pleading or affidavit, that one is "credibly informed and verily believes" such and such facts, means that, having no direct personal knowledge of the matter in question, he has derived his information with regard to it from authentic sources or from the statements of persons who are not only credible in the sense of being trustworthy, but also informed as to the particular matter or conversant with it.⁹⁹

CREDIT.

As a Noun

—In General. The term is derived from the Latin "credere," to trust,¹ and its meaning is perfectly well understood in commercial circles.²

—Belief or Trust. In this sense, "credit" has been defined primarily as meaning belief, faith, reliance on the truth or reality of something, and trust;³ trust given or received from one to another, and the like;⁴ and, derivatively, as meaning the capacity of being trusted,⁵ trustworthiness, or that which procures or adds to reputation or esteem.⁶ In an enlarged sense, the term may be employed as referring to a person's standing as a citizen in a community in which he lives;⁷ that influence connected with certain social positions.⁸ More specifically, in its commercial application, "credit" is the antonym of "cash" see Cash 14 C.J.S. p 18 note 69, denoting, or referring to, the time allowed by the creditor for the payment of goods sold by him to the debtor;⁹ a basis on which one may trade as he desires without payment, to the extent limited;¹⁰ the means by which a person can secure money with which to pay his debts or to carry on his business;¹¹ or security for the meeting of his obligations by the holder of the credit.¹² The term implies not merely the sale of goods or the loaning of money, but faith in the trustworthiness of the one to whom patronage is given,¹³ and that one is able, or may be compelled, to pay;¹⁴ and has been defined as meaning a good reputation and the confidence of the business community, in the borrower;¹⁵ hence the ability to borrow money or to obtain goods in virtue of the opinion conceived by the lender, or seller, that the party will repay;¹⁶ the confidence reposed in the ability and intention of a purchaser or a borrower to make payment at some future time, either specified or indefinite.¹⁷

—Chose in Action. As ordinarily used in trade and business, "credit" suggests nothing more than a chose in action¹⁸—a thing incorporeal, consisting in the right of one person to demand and recover from another, a sum of money or other thing in possession.¹⁹ It is, in a certain sense, property,²⁰ having no value other than the value which it has acquired by reason of the probability that the property, having present actual value, will be applied to the satisfaction of the claim which it represents.²¹ The term is of universal application to obligations due and to become due,²² attaching to a creditor and designating property possessed by him,²³ in contradistinction to its correlative words "debt," "debit," or "indebtedness,"²⁴ which have reference to the debtor and a personal obligation resting upon him.²⁵ When used in the sense of what is owing to a person, "credit" necessarily implies a debtor and creditor relation,²⁶ an absolute right on the part of the creditor,²⁷ a debt or obligation to pay,²⁸ which is now due or to become due,²⁹ and in an amount at least equal to that of the credit;³⁰ and it may also imply ability of the debtor by reason of property or estates to make the promised payment,³¹ or security for the meeting of his obligations by the holder of the credit, but is not intended ordinarily as a substitute for those obligations.³² In a particular connection, it has been held that the word imports the tangible evidence of indebtedness, something that may be taken, secreted, or destroyed.³³

Depending upon the circumstances, "credit," in this sense, has been variously defined as meaning a claim or cause of action for money;³⁴ the mere legal right with which one is clothed to demand the delivery of money or other property in the future;³⁵ something belonging to a person, but of an taxpayer,⁶¹ papers intended to represent and which could perform and were intended to perform the function of credits, such as travelers' checks,⁶² sales of goods on credit,⁶³ and uncollected premiums.⁶⁴ Under other circumstances "credit" has been held not to include agreement executed to sell real estate on condition precedent, no payment being made, and no title transferred,⁶⁵ bank shares and other corporate stock,⁶⁶ cash paid by insurance company to policyholder constituting a withdrawal by the policyholder of a portion of the reserve on his policy for which the company is bound, and not constituting a loan by the company to him,⁶⁷ claim based on a conversion,⁶⁸ contract for a sale of real estate, in the nature of an option which created no enforceable indebtedness,⁶⁹ contract of membership in an associated press,⁷⁰ execution in hands of sheriff for service,⁷¹ legacy in hands of executor or administrator,⁷² stocks,⁷³ surety or indemnity bond,⁷⁴ uncollected premiums of life insurance policy,⁷⁵ or various unliquidated claims.⁷⁶

As relating to deduction of a taxpayer's indebtedness from gross credits for purposes of assessment see the C.J.S. title Taxation § 414, also 61 C.J. p 651 notes 84-96.

—Offset or Payment. "Credit" has another and more restricted meaning which would narrow it down to a signification nearly synonymous with payment;⁷⁷ and, in its narrow or bookkeeping sense, as opposed to "debits," may be said to be a payment on account as shown by the creditor's books.⁷⁸ In this use, the word has been defined as meaning a payment, an acknowledgment or entry of payment, or of indebtedness reduced;⁷⁹ and, as applied specifically to bookkeeping entries, a balance of book accounts in favor of the credit side;⁸⁰ anything valuable standing on the creditor side of an account;⁸¹ a sum credited on the books of a company to a person who appears to be entitled to it;⁸² that which is entered in an account as an offset to a debt, or for which the party in whose favor the entry is made becomes the creditor of another; the opposite of debit; the side of a personal account on which everything is entered that answers as an offset to a debt, or on which payment is entered.⁸³ It has been said that, in the sense of acknowledgment of indebtedness reduced, the term imports finality, having neither duration nor expiration,⁸⁴ and that an entry of payment on the books is a "credit" only when made in such circumstances that the payment cannot be recalled.⁸⁵

—In Phrases.

Crédit foncier. A company or corporation formed for the purpose of carrying out improvements, by means of loans and advances on real estate security.⁶

Crédit mobilier. A company or association formed for carrying on a banking business or for the construction of public works, building of railroads, operation of mines, or other such enterprises, by means of loans or advances on the security of personal property.⁷

Credit of a government. A belief of its ability to comply with its engagements, and a confidence in its honor, that it will do that voluntarily which it cannot be compelled to do.⁸

Credit with banker. A term which does not imply payment, but a means of payment, more or less secure according to the solidity of the depository. The greater or less certainty of the security cannot affect the question of its character.⁹

Doubtful credit. The term is very comprehensive, and, when used without words of limitation or qualification, is understood to mean reputation or standing in the community, as distinguished from the estimate of particular individuals.¹⁰

Fictitious credit. "Credit" in the sense used in cases where the cause of action relied on is the creating of a fictitious credit has been said to mean the apparent possession of property on the part of the debtor out of which the creditor can enforce payment of such debt by law, as distinguished from such security or payment the creditor may hope to gain by the debtor's inducing some one else to help him pay or secure it.¹¹

Line of credit. A term with a fixed and definite meaning in the mercantile world, signifying a margin of credit enabling one to continue buying so long as he keeps his account within the limits by payments.¹² In a particular context, "line of

Words distinguished when used together

"The word 'funds' is an inclusive one, and might include both money debts or mutual credits,"⁶⁸ "net credits,"⁶⁹ "rights and credits,"⁷⁰ "transfer of credits,"⁷¹ and "transfer of credits between different points by cable."⁷²

As an Adjective

Credit company. Credit companies, are strictly analogous to land mortgage banks, except that they invest their funds in loans on the security of general industrial undertakings, to which business they have added the function of negotiators of direct loans between companies formed for the conduct of such undertakings and the capitalist public.⁷³

Credit limit. A credit with a limit as to amount which an expectant seller of goods extends to an expectant buyer, implicit in which (when operative) necessarily is the existence of a debt due by the buyer to the seller on an order of the former accepted and executed by the latter.⁷⁴

Credit man. An employee of a commercial house whose special business it is to inquire with reference to the merit of all persons applying to purchase on credit, and who determines to whom credit shall be given, and the amount.⁷⁵

tion. A corporation or voluntary association without capital stock organized and carried on solely for the mutual benefit of its members and not for profit, which limits its memberships to persons who do business in whole or in part on a credit basis, and which has as its main purposes the establishment and maintenance of a credit-rating service that may be resorted to by its members to secure credit reports, and other information of a similar nature, respecting the credit safety of outstanding accounts or the financial responsibility of customers.⁷⁶

Other phrases: "Credit agreement,"⁷⁷ "credit instrument,"⁷⁸ "credit price,"⁷⁹ "credit union" see Building and Loan Associations § 1 note 5, and "new credit limit" be guaranteed."⁸⁰

As a Verb

—Present Tense. Defined generally by the Century Dictionary as meaning to give credit for,⁸¹ and judicially, as meaning to enter upon the credit side of an account.⁸²

Phrases: "Credit my account,"⁸³ and "credit the drawer."⁸⁴

and credits if they were not specified; but considered separately, the words have familiar meanings, and 'credits' refers to obligations or debts of others to the bank."—Robinson v. U. S., C.C.A.Tenn., 30 F.2d 25, 28.

71. Inexact use of term in foreign exchange

"The customer does not open 'a credit' with the banker here, but makes or agrees to make a payment of dollars to him. Whether, however, it was intended to indicate that the 'credit' which is 'transferred' is the customer's credit for dollars with the banker, or the latter's credit for dollars with some other financial institution here, it is an inexact and incomplete statement to say that it is 'transferred' to London, for example. Even assuming that 'credits' as such are involved at all, it is not the mere transfer of a dollar credit which the customer wants or the banker makes, but a conversion or exchange of a dollar 'credit' here into a pound 'credit,' say, in England."—Richard v. American Union Bank, 204 N.Y.S. 719, 721, 123 Misc. 92.

84. Intention to certify, not indorse

"The words 'credit the drawer' above Raesly's signature [on the face of the note] clearly are appropriate words to indicate his intention to certify the character and ownership of the note and not to become an indorser."—Merchants' Nat. Bank of Bangor v. Raesly, 136 A. 238, 288 Pa. 374, 58 A.L.R. 230.

No promise or undertaking implied

In construing the term as written upon the face of a promissory note by the indorsee, the court said: "The words . . . imply no promise or undertaking on the part of him who uses them, but are a direction to all persons to whom the note may be presented, to treat with the drawer as the owner, notwithstanding the apparent title of the indorsee."—

—Credited. The use of "credited" instead of "actually paid" a sum contemplated, is of no significance, because it is the appropriate term with relation to a current business transaction where a credit in one connection may be absorbed by a debit in another.⁸⁵

Phrases: "Amount of such overpayment . . . shall . . . be credited,"⁸⁶ "credited to such individual policy holder,"⁸⁷ "income . . . properly paid or credited,"⁸⁸ and "paid or credited . . . to any legatee."⁸⁹

CREDITABLE. Worthy of belief.⁹⁰ The word has been distinguished from "credible" see ante p 1039 note 87.

Creditable witness. One competent to testify;⁹¹ one whose testimony is worthy of credit, credence, belief—that is, in more modern phrase, a credible witness.⁹²

CREDIT INSURANCE. See the C.J.S. title Insurance §§ 10, 659, 887, 977, 1090, also 15 C.J. pp 1354-1365.

CRÉDITO. In Spanish law, claim or credit; the complement of debt, since every debt implies a corresponding credit. "Créditos" are of two kinds, namely, "comunes," common or general credits, and "privilegiados" or "preferidos," privileged or preferred credits.⁹³ It is with the latter class that the codes of the civil law countries deal and, as stated in Corpus Juris p 1365, they are classified in the codes according to their priority or preference, this being known in the French law as "privilege" or "privilegié" and in the Spanish as "privilegio," or "privilegiado." It has been said that the privilege of a "credito" is always created by law and never by contract, nor by confession of judgment, it being "stricti juris,"⁹⁴ and that it is entirely distinct from an "attachment,"⁹⁵ a "judgment,"⁹⁶ a "lien,"⁹⁷ or a "mortgage."⁹⁸

A discussion of the rights or relationships which give rise to such credits, the scope of their privilege, priority, or preference, their rank and order of payment, their extinction, and the right of the holders of such privileged credits to abstain from participating in bankruptcy proceedings of their debtors, may be found in 15 Corpus Juris p 1365 note 4-p 1370 note 61, with citations of the applicable articles of the codes and of other civil law authorities.

Crédito litigioso. In Spanish law, a claim in litigation, not one which is open to litigation, but one which is actually litigated; a claim which is disputed or contested. The term is applied only after an answer has been interposed in a suit.⁹⁹

other thing is due by obligation, promise, or in law;²³ one who has a valid cause of action, or a legal right to damages capable of enforcement by judicial process;²⁴ one who has a just claim for money, or a legal claim against another, or who owns a claim or demand;²⁵ a claimant in respect of commercial demands due or accruing due, whether the liability therefor is contested or not;²⁶ also, in particular connections, a person whose claim, upon certain conditions, is charged by law upon particular property;²⁷ the holder of a security or securities;²⁸ or one who has a claim against a debtor as well as one who has a claim against property.²⁹

As Claimant Ex Delicto

The term "creditor" has been held sufficiently comprehensive to include those holding claims arising out of tort; persons entitled to damages for torts—being broadly construed in furtherance of the purposes of remedial statutes.³⁰ In this inclusive sense, "creditor" has been defined as meaning any person having a claim or demand upon which a judgment for a sum of money, or directing the payment of money, can be recovered in an action;³¹ every one having a right to damages capable of judicial enforcement, whether growing out of tort or contract;³² every party who has a demand, an account, an interest, or a cause of action for which he might recover any debt, damages, penalty, or forfeiture;³³ one having a right to require the performance of any legal obligation, contract, or guaranty, or a legal right to damages growing out of contract or tort;³⁴ and, in a liberal sense, one who has a legal demand upon another, for money or other property which has got into the hands of another, without his consent, by mistake or accident, which he is entitled to have, or to a compensation in damages for, upon the ground of an implied promise.³⁵

As Judgment or Lien Creditor

The term "creditor," under particular circumstances, has been held not to include creditors at large, but to be confined to judgment creditors and those who have in some manner effected a lien on the debtor's property.³⁶ It is in this sense that the word is used in certain statutes governing procedure and relief, and when so used has been defined as meaning one who has acquired a lien, either by a legal or equitable attachment, or by seizure and levy on execution;³⁷ one armed with legal process

In Phrases

Creditor at large. One who has not reduced his claim to judgment at law, or who has not acquired, or does not possess, a lien for the enforcement of such demand; or, in other words, one who has not established his debt by a judgment rendered, or has not an acknowledged debt with an interest in the money of the debtor, or a lien created by contract, or by some distinct legal proceeding, or by law,⁵⁵ as distinguished from a creditor who has obtained some process on which property may be seized lawfully, and by which it is made liable, either immediately or ultimately, to be appropriated in satisfaction of his debt.⁵⁶ The term is used indifferently with the terms "general creditor,"⁵⁷ and "simple contract creditor."⁵⁸

Debtor and creditor. Wherever one person, by contract or by law, is liable and bound to pay another an amount of money, certain or uncertain, the relation of debtor and creditor exists between them.⁵⁹ The relation of debtor and creditor has been distinguished from "pledge" see the C.J.S. title Pledges § 3, also 49 C.J. p 898 note 56, and "sale" see the C.J.S. title Sales § 2, also 55 C.J. p 42 note 82.

Double creditor. One having a lien on two funds.⁶⁰

Execution creditor. One who, having recovered a judgment against the debtor for his debt, has also caused an execution to be issued thereon.⁶¹

General creditor. An unsecured creditor,⁶² as distinguished from a creditor who has a lien on property and is lawfully in possession under such lien;⁶³ one who has not procured a lien on property by some legal process, as distinguished from a creditor who has obtained some process by which the property may be lawfully seized, and by which it is made liable either immediately or ultimately to be appropriated in satisfaction of his debt;⁶⁴ a person who has given credit and who has no lien or security for the payment of the debt so created.⁶⁵ A "general creditor" has been held not to be included within the term "junior encumbrancer,"⁶⁶ and has been held not to include the holder of a claim against a city, who is entitled to payment only from and out of the funds appropriated to the payment of such claims.⁶⁷ The term has been held equivalent to "creditor at large" see supra note 57, and distinguished from "judgment creditor."⁶⁸

Judgment creditor. A term with a special meaning, and defined as one whose claim has been merged into a judgment against his debtor, and under which, generally, execution may be had;⁶⁹ one who has obtained a judgment against his debtor, 59. Ga.—Banks v. McCandless, 47 S. E. 332, 335, 119 Ga. 793.

Broad scope of definition

(1) It has been said that this definition is much broader than is generally supposed and includes a liability for a wrongful conversion of property.—Banks v. McCandless, supra.

(2) It may arise by direct agreement, or breach of duty, between the parties.—Commercial National Bank v. Taylor, 19 N.Y.S. 533, 535, 64 Hun 493.

(3) Also it has been said that the phrase implies that the one has given credit to the other in a contract and that it would be absurd to say that a fine imposed as a punishment for a penal offence was a debt contracted.—Whiteacre v. Rector, 29

Gratt. 714, 716, 70 Va. 714, 716, 26 Am.R. 420.

- b. Nature, scope, and purpose

a. Definition and Classes

Creditors' bills are bills in equity filed by creditors to reach and subject to the payment of their debts so-called equitable property or assets which cannot be reached by a levy and sale on execution at law. There is a distinction between general creditors' bills and judgment creditors' bills.

Generally defined, creditors' suits or bills are bills in equity filed by creditors to enforce the payment of debts out of property of debtors under circumstances which impede or render impossible the collection of the debts by the ordinary process of execution.¹ In the sense in which the term is used in this title creditors' suits are proceedings in equity to compel the discovery and application to the payment of debts of so-called equitable assets or property which cannot be reached by levy and sale on execution at law.² In accordance with this definition, certain bills in equity have been held to be, or not to be, creditors' bills.³ In some of the states statutes have been enacted which materially enlarge the kinds of property of debtors that may be reached without resort to equitable proceedings, or which materially enlarge the chancery jurisdiction and provide for proceedings more or less closely resembling creditors' bills.⁴ It is not essential that a creditors' suit should be such in its inception; a bill by a single creditor, although filed on behalf of himself only, may be converted into a creditors' suit, as shown infra § 55. There are two classes of creditors' bills, one to reach the equitable assets or property of the debtor on which execution at law cannot be levied; the other where property legally liable to execution has been fraudulently conveyed and the creditor seeks to have the conveyance set aside.⁵ A creditors' bill of the first-mentioned class has been defined supra this section, while the latter class is discussed in the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 319, 321, also 27 C.J. p 716 note 55—p 717 note 60, p 719 note 81. Other classes of proceedings commonly designated as creditors' bills, but which are not within the scope of this article, are bills by creditors of deceased persons against the personal representatives to compel an accounting and settlement of the estate, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Executors and Administrators § 849, also 24 C.J. p 954 notes 68, 69; bills by creditors to set aside fraudulent con-

It has always been the policy of the commonwealth that the assets of a debtor should be subject to payment of his debts, and the purpose of the statute was to give the broadest scope to such proceedings and thereby provide in equity in aid of the law a remedy analogous to creditors' suits.—Orange Hardware Co. v. Ryan, supra.

Effect of statute

A statute providing that creditors' bill might be filed after action at law was begun and before rendition of final judgment therein did not define a creditors' bill or change existing rule as to what constitutes essential elements of a creditors' bill.—Stewart v. Manget, 181 So. 370, 132 Fla. 498.

"Debt"

Liability of building contractor to creditor which furnished materials and performed labor under contract in connection with erection of building, evidenced by final bill, approved by authorized representative of building contractor, showing amount due, is a "debt" within statute authorizing suit by creditor to reach and apply property of debtor in payment of debt.—*Bethlehem Fabricators v. General and judgment creditors' bills. General creditors' bills are such as are brought in behalf of all creditors.⁶ Judgment creditors' bills are those instituted by one or more judgment creditors for the purpose of subjecting equitable and other interests of a living debtor, or of removing obstructions in the way of the process of execution.⁷

b. Nature, Scope, and Purpose

Creditors' bills are in the nature of proceedings in rem, ordinarily ancillary. Their purpose is to bring into exercise the equitable powers of the court to enforce a judgment by means of an equitable execution when an execution at law cannot be had.

Creditors' bills are in the nature of proceedings in rem rather than in personam,⁸ and are ancillary and not original proceedings,⁹ being a continuation in effect of the judgments upon which they are founded to work out satisfaction thereof.¹⁰ It has been held, however, that a judgment creditor's proceeding to subject to the satisfaction of his judgment intangible property which could not be reached by an execution at law is not purely an ancillary proceeding, although the judgment was rendered in an action at law, but is an independent proceeding in equity to be governed by equity practice and procedure.¹¹ The scope and purpose of a creditors' bill is to bring into exercise the equitable powers of the court¹² to enforce a judgment by means of an equitable execution,¹³ where

Bill by single creditor

A bill by one creditor of an insolvent corporation, praying that all creditors be convened, that the amount and priority of their claims be ascertained, and that all necessary accounts and inquiries be taken and made, is a general creditors' bill.—Piedmont, etc., L. Ins. Co. v. Maury, 75 Va. 508.

It is not directed at property alone, or property fraudulently appropriated within the purview of the statute of Elizabeth; but it is directed at all the assets of the defendants, as well that existing in the form of tangible property as that in the form of open accounts, notes due, and choses in action generally, for the ingathering of which a receiver is necessary."—Fink v. Comparable to supplementary proceedings

A judgment creditor's bill is in essence an equitable execution, comparable to proceedings supplementary to execution.—Pierce v. U. S., Mo., 41 S.Ct. 365, 255 U.S. 398, 65 L.Ed. 697, modifying 257 F. 514, 171 C.C.A. 1, rehearing of which was denied 260 F. 158, 171 C.C.A. 194, certiorari denied 40 S.Ct. 15, 250 U.S. 670, 63 L.Ed. 1199.

an execution at law cannot be had and no adequate legal remedy exists. Where the purpose of the bill is to reach a debt or fund in the hands of a third person, it is said to be in the nature of an equitable attachment or garnishment.¹⁴ So a suit by a judgment creditor to subject property which cannot be reached by execution has been termed "an equitable levy."¹⁵ A creditors' bill filed after return of an execution unsatisfied is not an action on a judgment within the meaning of a statute relating to such actions.¹⁶ It is often said that a court of equity has no jurisdiction of a creditors' bill if there is no judgment at law, or if any indispensable party is not on the record; but this is not an accurate use of the term. If the relief sought is of an equitable character, and the parties against whom it is sought are in court, a court of equity has jurisdiction.¹⁷

§ 2. Statutory Provisions

Statutes authorizing creditors' suits do not confer jurisdiction to entertain a suit instituted before their enactment.

Statutes regulating the rights of creditors, to resort to proceedings of an equitable nature to reach property of their debtors, or to maintain proceedings more or less analogous to creditors' bills, are referred to supra § 1 a and infra § 7 b. Such a statute does not confer jurisdiction to entertain a suit instituted before its enactment.¹⁸

§ 3. Adequate Remedy at Law

- a. In general
- b. Effect of abolition of distinction between law and equity

a. In General

A creditors' bill will not lie where there is an adequate remedy at law.

The rule that a court of equity will not aid a complainant where there is an adequate remedy at law is especially applicable to creditors' suits.¹⁹ Where the property sought to be subjected can be reached by the process of courts of law, a creditors' bill will not be entertained.²⁰ To sustain the jurisdiction of equity, it must appear that a court of law is incompetent to reach the property of defendant on execution, either by reason of the peculiar character of the property or from inability to discover it,²¹ or because the enforcement of the legal remedy is obstructed by some encumbrance or by a transfer which has been made to defeat the creditors' rights.²² Where, however, the creditor has no remedy at law,²³ or where, although the

Other statements of purpose

(1) Nature and purpose of a creditor's bill is to enable creditor to apply to payment of his debt property of judgment debtor, which by its nature cannot be taken in an execution at law, or to convert holder of a legal estate into a trustee, and call for a conveyance, or to have it sold in satisfaction of his claim, or to aid creditor in reaching property of debtor by removing fraudulent judgments or conveyances which defeat his remedy at law.—Gilbank v. Benton, 50 P.2d 815, 9 Cal.App.2d 517.

creditor has a remedy at law, it is incomplete or inadequate,²⁴ he may resort to a court of equity.

Sale of equitable interests on execution. Statutes authorizing the sale of equitable interests on execution, unless they contain a prohibitory or restrictive clause, afford a cumulative remedy merely, and do not deprive the creditor of his right given by a prior statute to go into equity to reach such interests.²⁵

b. Effect of Abolition of Distinction between Law and Equity

Creditors' bills ordinarily are maintainable in those states where the distinction between law and equity has been abolished.

As a rule, in those states where the distinction between law and equity has been abolished and the two systems are merged, creditors' bills nevertheless exist and are entertained by the courts unless they are by statute expressly abolished or supplanted by some other remedy;²⁶ but the rule does not prevail in some states.²⁷

§ 4. — Attachment or Garnishment

In some states the statutory remedies of attachment and garnishment are cumulative with the remedy by creditors' bill, while in others they are exclusive, if adequate. Creditors' bills are not barred by garnishment proceedings which do not come to a trial on the merits.

In some jurisdictions the statutory remedies of attachment and garnishment are held to be cumulative only, and not to take away the remedy by creditors' bill;²⁸ but in several other states the statutory proceedings are held to be exclusive,²⁹ provided the remedy at law in the particular case is adequate.³⁰ Whether or not the remedy by attachment or garnishment is cumulative only, it has been held that a creditor is not entitled to both remedies at the same time, and that, where he has proceeded by attachment or garnishment and that process is still pending, chancery will not entertain jurisdiction;³¹ but it has also been held that garnishment proceedings which do not come to trial on the merits,³² or which are pursued no further than to give warning,³³ do not bar a creditors' bill.

Where the ground of jurisdiction under the statute is the creditor's lack of a remedy at law, the fact that an equitable attachment might have been obtained by a judgment creditor does not bar his remedy by creditors' bill.³⁴

§ 5. — Supplementary Proceedings to Execution

Proceedings supplementary to execution supplant creditors' bills in some states, but not in others. If supplementary proceedings do not afford an adequate remedy, a creditor may in some states maintain a creditors' bill.

The decisions are in conflict as to whether statutory proceedings supplementary to execution oust the jurisdiction of equity to entertain bills to discover and subject choses in action and equitable assets. In some states it is held that the statutory proceedings are exclusive;³⁵ in others it is held that the remedy in equity is not superseded;³⁶ and in yet others it is held that, if for any

Pendency of proceedings supplementary to execution

(1) Pendency of proceedings supplementary to execution will not preclude the maintenance of a judgment reason the supplementary proceedings do not afford an adequate remedy, a creditors' bill may be maintained.³⁷

§ 6. Grounds in General

Equity will in a proper case aid a creditor who is unable to collect his debt at law.

Equity will, in a proper case, assume jurisdiction to aid a creditor who is unable to collect his debt at law.³⁸ To enforce a lien against real estate incumbered by trusts, a judgment creditor must, under some statutes, proceed by bill in equity.³⁹ Where the main object of a creditors' bill is to hold the affairs of several defendants in statu quo until plaintiff can try a suit at law against one of the defendants for damages, the bill is without equity,⁴⁰ but equity may be resorted to when necescreditor's suit.—Taylor v. Persse, 15 How.Pr., N.Y., 417.

(2) The creditor may abandon the proceedings if no receiver has been appointed, and commence a creditor's suit.—Bennett v. McGuire, 58 Barb., N.Y., 625, 5 Lans. 183.

In North Carolina it has been held that Code §§ 264-274, relative to proceedings supplementary to execution, is intended to perfect the creditor's remedy in the same action, and that a judgment creditor may, notwithstanding such provisions, prosecute a new and independent suit, instituted and conducted for the benefit of all the creditors against additional defendants whose indebtedness he proposes to call in and subject to the payment of creditors.—Bronson v. Wilmington North Carolina Ins. Co., 85 N.C. 411.

In California

(1) Where statutory proceedings supplementary to execution are adequate, a creditors' bill cannot be maintained; but, where statutory proceedings supplemental to execution afford no adequate remedy, relief by creditor's bill is available.—Phillips v. Lehfeltdt, 179 P. 724, 39 Cal.App. 791.—Bonner v. Lehfeltdt, 179 P. 722, 39 Cal.App. 649.

(2) Proceedings supplemental to execution are not adequate remedy when they cannot, in themselves, result in subjecting property to payment of plaintiff's claim.—Bond v. Bulgheroni, 8 P.2d 130, 215 Cal. 7.

(3) They are wholly inadequate when the grantee of a judgment debtor asserts title in himself, since to order the application of property claimed by a person in his own right would be to deprive him of his property on a summary proceeding and without due process.—Bond v. Bulgheroni, supra.

(4) Where judgment creditor claims that title of debtor's transferee is invalid, issue respecting title should be tried in appropriate action wherein judgment may be had and parties conclusively bound.—Bond v. Bulgheroni, supra.

While court of equity should not obstruct court of law from helping judgment creditor collect his honest obligation, court of equity may assist judgment creditor in collection of his obligation.—Montgomery & Crawford v. Arcadia Mills, 176 S.E. 589, 173 S.C. 464.

Realty subject to constructive trust in favor of purchaser who paid consideration but took title in third person's name constituted purchaser's "assets" within statute relating to property liable for debts, and, in view of fraudulent transfer of other property, court of equity had power to grant relief to person subsequently obtaining personal injury judgment against purchaser.—Duncan v. Laury, 292 N.Y.S. 138, 249 App.Div. 314.

Judgment imposing fine

Under Rev.St. § 1041, providing that a judgment imposing a fine for an offense against the United States "may be enforced by execution against the property of the defendant in like manner as judgments in civil cases are enforced," such a judgment may support a creditors' bill in aid of an execution which has proved fruitless.—Pierce v. U. S., Mo., 257 F. 514, 171 C.C.A. 1, rehearing denied 260 F. 158, 171 C.C.A. 194, certiorari denied 40 S.Ct. 15, 250 U.S. 670, 63 L.Ed. 1199, and modified on other grounds 41 S.Ct. 365, 255 U.S. 398, 65 L.Ed. 697.

Removal of cloud on title

Conveyances for and in the name of a corporation, not void on their face, constituted clouds on title and hindrances to judgment creditors which on their suit in equity the court would remove.—Dothan Lumber Co. v. Bell Lumber Co., 69 So. 419, 193 Ala. 399.

Bill of discovery

(1) In Texas, under Acts 38th Leg. 1923 c 19, reviving bills of discovery, a bill of discovery will lie in favor of a judgment creditor after return of execution unsatisfied to compel judgment debtor to disclose facts with reference to alleged fraudulent sale, after filing of suit by judgment creditor, and to answer generally as to any property, or interest in any property, then owned by him, out of which plaintiff might satisfy his judgment.—National Compress Co. v. Hamlin, Tex., 269 S.W. 1024, dismissing writs of error Texas & N. O. Ry. Co. v. Wagner, Civ.App., 262 S.W. 902, Mims v. Hunken, Civ.App., 262 S.W. 930, L. B. Price Mercantile Co. v. Moore, Civ. App., 263 S.W. 657, Chapman v. Leaverton, Civ.App., 263 S.W. 1038, International Travelers' Ass'n v. Griffing, Civ.App., 264 S.W. 263, National Compress Co. v. Hamlin, Civ. App., 264 S.W. 488, and Alexander v. Alexander, Civ.App., 265 S.W. 1072.

(2) Bill of discovery to force disclosure of facts that would enable judgment creditor to satisfy a judgment already procured is recognized and permitted where judgment creditor has been unable to find sufficient property of judgment debtor to satisfy judgment.—B. F. Avery & Sons Plow Co. v. Mayfield, Tex.Civ.App., 111 S.W.2d 1134, error dismissed.

In Massachusetts a creditor having attached on mesne process in law action all right of heirs in decedent's realty within thirty days, and having brought bill in equity to enforce rights, lien of attachment on share of proceeds belonging to one heir, the debtor more than enough to satisfy the judgment, although changed in form by administrator's sale, never had been dissolved and was enforceable under Rev.L. c 187 §§ 38, 55.—Bartlett v. sary to enforce collection of an execution issued in an action at law.⁴¹ Whether a general creditors' bill will lie is determined, not so much by the character of the debtor, as by the nature of the relief sought.⁴²

§ 7. Property Not Reachable by Execution

- a. In general
- b. Statutes conferring jurisdiction

a. In General

In some states creditors' bills are maintainable to reach property that cannot be reached by execution at law, while in others such bill will not lie in the absence of a statute authorizing it.

The same conflict that formerly existed in the decisions of English courts as to whether bills in chancery were maintainable to reach choses in action, equitable interests, and other property that cannot be reached by execution at law⁴³ exists in the decisions of the courts in the United States. In a majority of jurisdictions such bills are generally entertained;⁴⁴ but in some states, in the absence of statute, jurisdiction to entertain such bills has been either altogether denied or confined strictly to cases of fraud and trust.⁴⁵

Under many state statutes judgment creditors may maintain proceedings to reach choses in action and other property of their debtors which cannot be reached by execution at law.

In nearly all the states statutes have been enacted, providing that, when an execution has been returned wholly or partly unsatisfied, the judgment creditor may maintain a proceeding against the judgment debtor and any other person to compel the discovery of anything in action, or other property belonging to the debtor, and of any money, thing in action, or other property due to him, or held in trust for him, and to procure satisfaction of the judgment out of such property, or providing for a creditors' bill to reach and apply any such property or right that cannot be attached or taken on an execution at law.⁴⁶ It has been held, however, that, under a statute permitting a creditor to reach any property, etc., of the debtor "which cannot be reached to be attached or taken in execution in an action at law", the inability to reach property means legal inability resulting from the fact that the property is of a nature not attachable or subject to execution, and does not include property which cannot be found, or which, because of its situation, cannot be attached.⁴⁷

Independent ground of chancery jurisdiction unnecessary

Under the Nebraska statute it is not necessary to the maintenance of a creditors' suit that some independent ground of chancery jurisdiction, such as fraud or trust, shall exist, but such a suit may be maintained by a judgment creditor to reach any assets of the debtor not immediately subject to execution or garnishment, and which are not exempt by statute or immune on the ground of public policy.—Fremont Farmers Union Co-op. Ass'n v. Markussen, supra.

Operation and effect of statutes

(1) Michigan statute authorizing bill in chancery after return of unsatisfied execution on judgment was not intended to restrict inherent jurisdiction of chancery courts, as regards right to maintain creditors'

suit after return of unsatisfied execution on money decree in chancery.—Kraft v. Stott, 270 N.W. 253, 278 Mich. 162.

(2) Equitable jurisdiction of statutory proceeding under Massachusetts statute to reach and apply equitable assets depends not on the nature of plaintiff's debt or cause of action, but on existence of some property which cannot be attached or taken on execution.—Todd v. Pearce, 197 N. E. 156, 291 Mass. 455.

(3) A creditor's bill under Cahill Rev.St.1931 c 22 par 49 is in the nature of an inquisition, the purpose of which is to discover property of the debtor which may be applied to the satisfaction of his debts, and qualitatively and usually quantitatively differs from other proceedings in chancery.—McCarthy v. Chicago Title & Trust Co., 264 Ill. App. 423.

Provisions not in conflict

Statute entitling execution creditor to court order requiring debtor to make discovery concerning his property was held not in conflict with statute authorizing bill in chancery after return of execution unsatisfied, nor does the former statute repeal the latter.—Kraft v. Stott, 270 N.W. 253, 278 Mich. 162.

47. Mass.—H. E. Shaw Co. v. Kar-casinas, 180 N.E. 140, 278 Mass. 397.

§ 8. Property and Rights Subject

Personal property may be reached by creditors' bill. Generally, the rights of a creditor in the debtor's property are no better than the rights of the debtor himself.

Personal property as well as real property may be reached by creditors' bill.⁴⁸ The rights of a creditor as to the property of his debtor are derivative, and generally are no better than the rights of the debtor himself.⁴⁹ With some exceptions, the particular rights or interests which may be subjected to the payment of debts are discussed infra §§ 9-34. As to the right to maintain a creditors' bill to enforce liabilities against the separate estates of married women, see the title Husband and Wife § 361, also 30 C.J. p 923 note 33.

§ 9. — After-Acquired Property in General

Property acquired by the debtor after the debt was incurred may be subjected to payment of the debt.

Creditors may look not only to property belonging to the debtor at the time credit was given, but also to property which the debtor subsequently acquired;⁵⁰ but complainant cannot reach property acquired by the debtor after the filing of the bill, without a supplemental bill, as stated infra § 67.

§ 10. — Annuities

An annuity ordinarily may be reached by a creditors' bill for the payment of the annuitant's debts.

Ordinarily, an annuity may be reached by a creditors' bill for the payment of the annuitant's debts.⁵¹ Thus, an annuity in lieu of dower, made a charge on real and personal property by will, is subject to a creditors' bill,⁵² as is an annuity to be paid to their mother by the grantees in a deed,⁵³ and an annuity reserved to the assignor in an assignment in trust for the benefit of creditors.⁵⁴ However, it has been held that an annuity created for a debtor by a third person, the debtor having no control over the fund, is not subject to a creditors' bill, although alienable, when such annuity is not more than sufficient for the debtor's support.⁵⁵

§ 11. — Choses in Action in General

In some states, in the absence of statute or of fraud or other ground of equity jurisdiction, choses in action are not subject in equity to the payment of debts, while in others they may be so subjected. In many states, the statutes give such equitable remedy to creditors.

In some jurisdictions it is held that, in the absence of express statutory authorization, choses in action of a debtor cannot be subjected in equity to the payment of his debts,⁵⁶ where there is no fraud, mistake, trust, or other recognized ground of equitable jurisdiction.⁵⁷ In other states, the jurisdiction is sustained.⁵⁸ In many states, by force of statutes, choses in action are reachable in equity for the payment of debts;⁵⁹ but a cause of action which is not assignable cannot be reach-

Money due debtor by contract

If one renders services for a corporation with understanding between it, him, and his wife that the value thereof shall be paid in additional dividends to his wife, a stockholder, and that he shall receive from her a fair compensation, a creditor of his has no lien on moneys to come to him, either in the hands of the corporation or the wife, but the creditor's remedy is by garnishment, operating only on compensation due and unpaid.—*Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Alabama A. "Thing in action" defined

Within Chancery Act § 40, authorizing judgment creditor by bill to compel discovery of anything in action due judgment debtor, a "thing in action" is property distinguished from thing of which owner has actual or constructive possession, but for which he may bring action to reduce to possession, and to authorize judgment creditor to bring bill to discover anything in action, due judgment debtor, there must be fixed present right of debtor, and under such section judgment creditor of piano salesman could reach commission on sales of pianos accrued and in hands of debtor's employer from so-called "repeat orders."—Tumy v. Mayer, 124 N.E. 661, 289 Ill. 458, af-

ed by a creditor, under a statute authorizing a suit by a creditor to reach and apply to his debt "property, right, title, or interest, legal or equitable."⁶⁰

Proceeds of suit to recover back usurious interest. The proceeds of a suit brought by a judgment debtor to avoid usurious contracts are reachable by a creditors' bill;⁶¹ but the debtor may dismiss or compromise the suit, at his pleasure, regardless of the rights of his creditors.⁶²

Debts in judgment. Demands reduced to judgment may be reached by a creditors' bill.⁶³

§ 12. — Contingent Interest in Estate

Vested interests, even in a contingent right, may be reached by a creditors' bill. There is authority both for and against the right of creditors to subject contingent remainders to the debts of the remainderman.

A vested interest in the proceeds of an estate is subject to the payment of the beneficiary's debts,⁶⁴ but the rule is otherwise if the beneficiary's rights are contingent, and the fund may never be enjoyed by him.⁶⁵ A vested remainder subject to a life estate may be reached by a creditors' bill,⁶⁶ as may a vested interest in a contingent right;⁶⁷ and an interest vesting on the death of the debtor may be reached by bill against his executor.⁶⁸

Breach of agreement to lend money

Right of recovery against trust company for breach of agreement to lend money is a right which cannot be reached, attached, or taken in execution in action at law, and is included within phrase "any property, right, title or interest" in Rev. L. c. 159 § 3 cl. 7.—Digney v. Blanchard, 118 N.E. 250, 229 Mass. 235.

Before and after execution

(1) Bill in equity to reach defendant's interest in judgment lies both before and after issuance of execution on judgment debt with injunction to stay satisfaction of execution.—Orange Hardware Co. v. Ryan, supra.

(2) Judgment debt is assignable and can be reached by equitable trustee process before issuance of execution.—Orange Hardware Co. v. Ryan, supra.

Proceeds of judgment

Where creditor brought suit in equity to reach and apply cause of action in favor of debtor in satisfaction of debt, and debtor subsequently obtained judgment on cause of action and proceeds of judgment were paid to attorneys for debtor, proceeds of judgment on cause of action retained by attorneys for debtor under decree of court were available for satisfaction of debt.—*Bethlehem Fabricators v. Where discovery disclosed that judgment debtor was owner or vested remainder interest in trust property, creditor was entitled to establishment of lien on such remainder

It has been held that a contingent remainder cannot be sold for the benefit of the creditors of the possible remainderman,⁶⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁷⁰

§ 13. — Copyright

A creditors' bill will lie to subject a copyright or royalties due or to become due, to the owner's debts.

A copyright may be reached and subjected to its owner's debts by means of a creditors' bill,⁷¹ but the court would be compelled to decree and enforce a transfer in the mode provided by statute.⁷² It has been held that even though an author who has obtained a copyright cannot be deprived by creditors of any of the rights secured by the copyright law, such protection does not extend to the proceeds of the sale of the copyright.⁷³ Royalties due to an author, or to become due on a future accounting, under a publishing contract may be reached by a creditors' bill.⁷⁴

§ 15. — Crops

A creditors' bill will lie to subject a debtor's interest in crops.

A debtor's crops raised on a farm carried on in the name of another,⁸⁰ or rented by the debtor,⁸¹ are subject to a creditors' bill.

§ 16. — Debt Due to a Debtor of the Debtor

A debt due to a debtor of the debtor is not subject to a creditors' bill.

A debt due to a debtor of the debtor cannot be reached by a creditors' bill.⁸² However, an insurance agent's interest in an uncollected renewal premium is not a debt due to the insurance company but a debt of the company due to him, and it may be reached.⁸³

§ 17. — Debts Due from United States, State or Municipal or Public Corporations

- a. Debts due from United States
- b. Debts due from state
- c. Debts due from municipal or public corporations

a. Debts Due from United States

Debts due to a debtor from the United States government are subject to a creditors' suit in some cases, but not in others.

It has been held that, where the United States government directs a debt due to a deceased debtor to be paid to his children and heirs, the fund may be subjected to the payment of a judgment against the administrators;⁸⁴ but money in court awaiting distribution to those in whose favor awards have been made in condemnation proceedings instituted by the government cannot be intercepted by means of a creditors' bill, or by an intervening petition in the nature thereof,⁸⁵ and an order directing a judgment debtor to pay to a receiver, to be applied on the debt, all salary received from the government in excess of one hundred dollars a month has been held erroneous as accomplishing indirectly what is forbidden to be done directly by attachment or garnishment.⁸⁶ Money due to a railroad company from the government under the federal statutes, where the obligation of the government is largely undetermined, is not in the hands, possession, or control of the debtor, within the meaning of a statute authorizing creditors' suits to reach and apply money so possessed or controlled.⁸⁷

b. Debts Due from State

A bill in equity will not lie to subject a debtor's salary as a state official, or money due him for materials and services furnished to the state.

A creditor cannot, by a bill in equity, subject the salary of his debtor as a state official⁸⁸ or money due him for materials and services furnished to the state.⁸⁹

c. Debts Due from Municipal or Public Corporations

Some authorities hold that money due to a debtor by a municipal or public corporation may be subjected to his debts by a creditors' bill, while other authorities hold to the contrary.

The authorities are in conflict on the question whether money owing to a debtor by a municipal or public corporation for work done or materials furnished under a contract or for salary can be subjected by a creditors' bill to the payment of his debts. In some states, a creditor may obtain discovery and relief by a bill with respect to sums due his debtor as an officer of, or a contractor with, a county, city, or town,⁹⁰ or by a bill to subject county warrants payable to the debtor through the hands of the county clerk for work done.⁹¹ In other jurisdictions, such a bill will not lie.⁹² Thus, compensation due to a public officer or employee cannot be subjected to a creditors' bill,⁹³ even though the officer's term of office has expired.⁹⁴ Fees earned by a public officer by the piece or by the job as the work is done may be reached by a judgment creditor, even though the day of payment had not arrived when the bill was filed;⁹⁵ but salary to be earned cannot be reached,⁹⁶ although the contrary has been held as to salary of a city officer not wholly earned or due, where the city council has actually set it apart and ordered it to be paid.⁹⁷ It has been held that, where a bill seeks to reach an amount alleged to be due by a city to a school board, which can be ascertained only by an accounting, equity has jurisdiction.⁹⁸ A suit does not lie by a judgment creditor to require the debtor to assign to him a claim against a county for bonds and to require the county to deliver the bonds, the only remedy of the debtor against the county being by mandamus.⁹⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that a debtor may be compelled to assign a demand against a city to a receiver, to be collected and applied to the satisfaction of the debt.¹

§ 18. — Dower Interests

An unassigned right of dower is subject to a creditors' bill under some statutes, but such right has been held not subject to payment of debts, in the absence of statute, fraud, or other equitable ground.

In many jurisdictions, it is held that an unassigned right of dower may be reached by a judgment creditor in equity by means of a creditors' bill or other suitable remedy;² but, in those jurisdictions, it is usually provided by statute that courts of equity may decree satisfaction of a judgment out of a thing in action whenever execution has been issued against other property and returned unsatisfied.³ On the other hand, it has been held that unassigned dower rights are not subject to a credi-

In Ohio

(1) Money so due may, under special statutory authority, be reached and applied by creditors.—Newark v. Funk, 15 Ohio St. 462.

Bill to compel assignment

Creditor's bill in equity to compel the assignment of a debt owed by a county will be allowed, where bill does not interfere with public interest.—Graves Bros. v. Lasley, 78 S.W. 2d 810, 190 Ark. 251.

In Missouri

(1) It has been held that, under statute exempting municipal corporations from garnishment, a wife could not maintain creditors' bill to collect alimony judgment from city employee by appointment of receiver to receive and pay over employee's salary.—State ex rel. Busby v. Cowan, App., 107 S.W.2d 805.

(2) On the other hand, it has been held that, "where a debtor has absconded so that judgment cannot be obtained against him, and has no property in the State subject to attachment, but has money in a city treasury belonging to him, it may be reached by bill in equity, in the first instance, without a previous judgment at law, and without showing fraud or any other recognized ground of equitable jurisdiction. And the fact that cities are not liable under the statutory garnishment will not protect them from such proceeding in equity."—Pendleton v. Perkins, 49 Mo. 565.

(3) So, the statute exempting a municipal corporation from garnishment does not prevent maintenance of a suit in the nature of an equitable attachment to reach funds owing for completed work by a municipal corporation to a foreign corporation which has ceased to do business in the state and has no other property there.—Wilkinson v. Harding Dredge Co., 167 S.W. 595, 180 Mo.App. 571—De Field v. Harding Dredge Co., 167 S.W. 593, 180 Mo.App. 563.

(4) It has been held that a debt due by a municipal corporation for work done under contract may by a creditors' bill be subjected to the satisfaction of judgment against the latter.—Furlong v. Thomssen, 19 Mo. App. 364.

(5) But this latter case is of doubtful authority in view of the decision in Geist v. St. Louis, 57 S.W. 766, 156 Mo. 643, 79 Am.S.R. 545.

tors' bill in the absence of statute, fraud, or other equitable ground.⁴

§ 19. — Equitable Assets or Interests in General

An equitable interest of a debtor may be reached by a creditors' bill; but the bill will not lie to reach assets for which the debtor himself has not an actionable demand enforceable in an action in his own name.

Any beneficial interest of a debtor in real or personal property which cannot be reached by regular process of law and is not expressly exempted by statute may be reached by a creditors' bill and subjected to the payment or satisfaction of the debt;⁵ and only such property may be so reached.⁶ A creditors' bill will not lie to reach assets for which the debtor himself has not an actionable demand,⁷ and which he cannot recover in an action in his own name.⁸

§ 20. — Good Will

The good will of a business is not subject to a creditors' bill.

A creditors' bill does not lie to reach the good will of a business.⁹ So, where an insurance agency is transferable at the pleasure of the company, it and its good will are not equitable assets which can be reached by bill.¹⁰

Right to contribution

An equitable interest of an execution debtor, as a right of contribution, by reason of his payment of more than his share of a judgment against him and others, may be reached by creditors' bill, and subjected to the debt.—Sussex Trust Co. v. Bacon, 102 A. 785, 11 Del.Ch. 380.

Where creditor holds absolute deed as security for debt with bond to reconvey outstanding, and, on debtor's insolvency, takes property in payment of debt, in value exceeding amount of debt, creditors may have such property administered in equity as assets of insolvent, and proceeds applied first to secured debt, and surplus to other claims, which may be done without first tendering to secured creditor payment of his claim.—Kidd v. Kidd, 124 S.E. 45, 158 Ga. 546, 36 A.L.R. 798.

Trust funds

(1) Creditors' bill will lie to reach funds held in trust by sole legatee for missing judgment debtor.—Muller v. Cox, 130 A. 811, 98 N.J.Eq. 188.

(2) Debtor's interest in trust fund created either by himself or another or in resulting or constructive trust may be reached to satisfy judgment against him by a creditor's bill.—Hillsborough County v. Dickenson, 169 So. 734, 125 Fla. 181.

(3) The interest of one who takes under a will after expiration of a trust and without action on part of the trustee is not within the exception contained in Hurd Rev S. 1915-1916 c 22 § 49, authorizing creditor to reach any money or thing in action due to debtor or held in trust for him, except when such trust has in good faith been created by, or the fund so held in trust has proceeded from, some person other than defendant himself, and, as far as that provision is concerned, may be reached by a creditor's bill.—Kenwood Trust & Savings Bank v. Palmer, 209 Ill. App. 370, affirmed 121 N.E. 186, 285 Ill. 552.

(4) But such statutory exception will prevent the maintenance of a creditors' bill to reach the debtor's vested remainder interest in a trust estate created by a will providing that distribution of the trust's income and corpus to named children of the testator, including defendant, should be made as of a certain subsequent date not yet arrived and in a manner dependent on whether the testator's widow, still living, was alive on such date or whether her death occurred prior or subsequent thereto, especially in view of the spendthrift clause contained in the same will.—Von Kessler v. Scully, 267 Ill.App. 495.

Promise to pay mortgage

Grantee's promise to mortgagor to pay mortgage debt cannot be considered property held in trust for mortgagee so that latter can reach and apply same in payment of mortgage debt.—Bloch v. Budish, 180 N. E. 729, 279 Mass. 102.

Debtor held to have no equitable interest

Where defendant agreed in writing to buy lands from a third party, the purchase price to be paid in cash and in yearly installments, and entered into possession, but was unable to complete payments, whereupon his wife with her own money took over the contract and paid the amount due, which, with principal and interest, amounted to original purchase price, defendant had no equitable interest in the land subject to sale under a creditor's bill.—Holly v. as well as his interest under a fire policy, may ordinarily be reached by a creditors' bill.

In general, the interest of a debtor in a policy of insurance on his own life may be reached by a creditors' bill,¹¹ whether such interest arises by the terms of the policy or by reason of premiums paid by the debtor in fraud of creditors;¹² and the right of a member of a mutual benefit association to change the beneficiary makes his interest one which can be reached by a creditors' bill.¹³ However, the contingent interest of the insured, dependent on whether he outlives the beneficiary and the policy becomes payable to his estate, is not subject to a creditors' bill by his creditors during the life of the beneficiary, or before the latter's rights have lawfully been terminated.¹⁴ The interest of insured under a fire policy may be reached by a creditors' suit in a court of equity, although the insurer has the right either to pay the loss or to rebuild, and has not elected.¹⁵

§ 22. — Liquor Licenses

A liquor license not transferable without written permission of the excise board is not subject to a creditors' suit.

If, under statutes, a liquor license is not transferable without written permission of an excise board, it is a mere personal privilege and is not property which can be reached by a creditors' suit.¹⁶

§ 23. — Mere Possibilities

Mere possibilities cannot be reached by a creditors' bill.

A creditors' suit cannot reach mere possibilities,¹⁷ such as the chance that the debtor may be entitled to a share as next of kin in the estate of another should he outlive him;¹⁸ the possibility of earning salary or wages, as stated infra § 32; an interest in the profits upon a resale of land purchased by another at the debtor's request, although all the land has been resold except a certain part which represents the profits;¹⁹ or prospective dividends on stock owned by the debtor.²⁰ However, it has been held that, where a debtor was employed as a salesman, his compensation to be a percentage on all accepted orders received by him, he acquired a vested interest, as of the date of the contract, in all orders thereafter received which were subject to his commissions, and that such interest could be reached by a creditors' bill, even though the commissions

(2) A creditor's suit to recover insurance on a debtor's life, purchased with premiums in excess of five hundred dollars per annum, as authorized by Dom.Rel.L. § 22, L.1896 c 272, although brought before the conclusion of the administration of the debtor's estate, was not premature.—Guardian Trust Co. v. Straus, supra.

(3) Where a creditors' suit to recover insurance purchased on a debtor's life with premiums in excess of five hundred dollars per annum, as authorized by Dom.Rel.L. § 22, L. 1896, c. 272, is brought before conclusion of the administration of the debtor's estate, it must be proved and found that insured died insolvent.—Guardian Trust Co. v. Straus, supra.

(4) Where a creditor's suit was instituted to recover insurance purchased with premiums in excess of five hundred dollars per annum, prior to the conclusion of the administration of insured's estate, the fund resulting from the payment of the excess premiums should be impounded to await the conclusion of the administration when it should be distributed to the payment of creditors' claims and the balance, if any, then paid to the beneficiary.—Guardian Trust Co. v. Straus, supra.

Determination of liability

(2) Disposition of proceeds of deceased's policies above exemption must be determined according to rules governing conveyances generally.—Brasher v. Breen & Gardien Ins. Agency, supra.

Foreign insurer

Policy assigned by beneficiary

The interest of a wife in a policy of insurance on the life of her hus-

§ 24. — Property in Another State in General

Generally a creditors' bill will not lie to reach property in another state.

Unless the statute expressly authorizes it,²² a creditors' suit will not ordinarily lie to reach real property,²³ or property in general,²⁴ in another state, although there is jurisdiction of the person.

§ 25. — Property in Custody of Law in General

It is a general rule, subject to exceptions, that property in custodia legis cannot be reached by a creditors' bill.

Money paid into court cannot generally be reached by a creditors' bill, although the debtor has an interest therein and it is paid into court for his benefit.²⁵ However, the rule that property in custodia legis cannot be reached by a creditor is not a rule strictissimi juris, but is founded on convenience and is subject to exceptions.²⁶ Where a debtor has absconded, money in possession of an administrator as the debtor's distributive share of decedent's estate may be reached by an action in the nature of a creditor's bill,²⁷ and the fact that the administrator was not subject to garnishment at the time the action was commenced will not protect him from such action.²⁸

§ 26. — Redemption Rights

Redemption rights of a debtor may ordinarily be reached by a creditors' bill.

Both the right of a mortgagor or pledgor of real or personal property to redeem the same on payment of the debt, and the surplus of the property above the amount of the debt, can be reached by a creditors' bill,²⁹ as can also the right of a debtor to redeem property, the legal title to which is in another, upon complying with certain conditions,³⁰ or the proceeds of such property where the holder of the legal title has disposed of it and applied the proceeds to his own use.³¹ It has been held, however, that, in the absence of equitable ground, the mere fact that the lien of a judgment creditor obtained against the grantor subsequently to the making of the security deed cannot be enforced by levy and sale until the grantor's title has become revested by redemption, is insufficient to subject the grantor's interest in the land as an equitable

However, where a foreign corporation is a debtor to a creditor residing in the commonwealth and has no property there which can be attached, but has in the hands of its agent in the commonwealth promissory notes payable to the corporation, its property in the notes may be reached by a proceeding in equity under the statute, making the agent a party and compelling him to retain the notes to be applied to the discharge of the debt.—Silloway, v. Columbia Ins. Co., 8 Gray, Mass., 199.

In Wisconsin it has been held that a judgment creditor may bring suit to subject to payment of his judgment a note held by a nonresident debtor, made by a resident.—Bragg v. Gaynor, 55 N.W. 919, 85 Wis. 468, 21 L.R.A. 161.

asset,³² and that a creditors' bill is not the proper process for a pledgee suing as a judgment creditor to enforce his claim against the pledgor and the property pledged.³³ The right of a debtor to redeem land sold on execution against him within a certain time, and to use it meanwhile, is also proper subject matter for a creditors' bill,³⁴ provided there is no adequate remedy at law.³⁵

§ 27. — Rents

Rents of land may be reached by a creditors' bill under proper circumstances, provided there is no adequate legal remedy.

Under proper circumstances, the court may apply rents of land to the satisfaction of a judgment,³⁶ provided no adequate legal remedy exists by which they may be attached.³⁷

§ 28. — Resulting Trusts

A debtor's interest in property of a resulting trust is usually subject to a creditors' bill for the payment of his debts.

It is a well settled rule of equity that where property is paid for, either with the money or the assets of one person and title thereto is taken in the name of another, in the absence of circumstances showing a different intention or understanding, a resulting trust in the property arises in favor of the person whose money or assets are so used, as stated in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 116, also 65 C.J. p 382 notes 11-14, and his equitable interest in the property may be reached by creditors' bill.³⁸ This rule applies to an interest in a bond conditioned for the conveyance of land, where the purchase money is paid by the debtor and the bond is taken in the name of another.³⁹ The rule is not altered by the absence of fraud,⁴⁰ nor by the fact that the debtor was not insolvent or indebted to the creditor when the trust arose.⁴¹ Under the statutes in some jurisdictions, however, where a conveyance of land is made to one person and the consideration therefor is paid by another, the title vests in the person named as grantee, and no trust results in favor of the person paying the consideration save under prescribed circumstances, as stated in the C.J.S. title Trusts § 116, also 65 C.J. p 388 note 48 p 390 note 52. It has been held that such statutes preclude a creditor of the person paying the consideration from subjecting the property by a creditors' bill to the payment of the latter's debts, in the absence of fraud, actual or presumed, against creditors.⁴² Where property is conveyed on a trust to pay certain debts of the grantor, satisfaction of a judgment against him on another debt may be decreed out of the surplus remaining in the hands of the grantee.⁴³

§ 29. — Right of Action for Tort

A right of action for a personal tort is not property subject to a creditors' suit; but it is otherwise as to a right of action for conversion of or injury to property.

A mere right of action for a personal tort, such as assault and battery, slander, or malicious prosecution, is not property which can be reached by a creditors' suit.⁴⁴ This rule applies to a claim for personal injuries⁴⁵ or even to a verdict for person-

Specific lien necessary

It has been held that a creditor must have acquired a specific lien by levy or the filing of a transcript on a judgment debtor's interest in land under a resulting trust in order to support a creditors' suit.—Robison v. Gumaer, 95 P. 935, 43 Colo. 310.

al injuries before judgment has been entered thereon.⁴⁶ However, an assignable⁴⁷ right of action for a tort occasioning injury to property,⁴⁸ or for conversion of property,⁴⁹ even though the converted property has been used to pay a creditor of the debtor,⁵⁰ may be reached by bill in equity, or under statutory provisions analogous thereto.

§ 30. — Rights and Interests of Vendor and Purchaser

The respective rights and interests of a vendor and purchaser under a contract for the sale of land may be reached by a creditors' bill.

A vendor's lien for the unpaid purchase price of real estate is subject to a creditors' bill,⁵¹ and so of purchase money due the vendor,⁵² even though it is payable on a future contingency.⁵³ The equitable interest of a debtor in land under an executory contract of purchase is subject to a creditors' bill.⁵⁴ Where, however, a deed was made by a father to his son, but never acknowledged or delivered, and the son took timber to the full value of the amount which was paid as part of the consideration, upon subsequent rescission of the contract the son has no interest which can be reached by a creditors' bill.⁵⁵ In some states an option to purchase real estate confers no interest in the land which can be reached by a creditors' bill,⁵⁶ while in others creditors may reach and subject to their claims a debtor's interest in a lease containing an option to purchase at a price fixed by the lease.⁵⁷ An interest in land obtained by a contract resting in parol may be reached in equity where the contract has been fully performed;⁵⁸ but where a part of the consideration for the conveyance of land by a judgment debtor was a parol reservation of the right to occupy the premises for a specified time without payment of rent, it was held that the agreement was void and conferred no interest in the premises on the judgment debtor which could be reached by creditors.⁵⁹ Where a right to a conveyance has been forfeited by the laches of the purchaser in paying the installments due on the purchase price, a bill will not lie in behalf of his creditor to compel the sale of the land and the application of the proceeds to his debts.⁶⁰ A purchaser of land with his own funds, although for the benefit of another person, will be protected against the latter's creditors to the extent of the payment made.⁶¹

Claim for personal injuries is not property which can be reached by creditors' bill, and where street railway company's offer to pay certain sum in satisfaction of injured person's claim was not accepted, and his action was pending when bill to reach and apply his damages was filed, his cause of action could not be subjected.—*White Sewing Mach. Injury to building contract

(1) Cause of action in tort in favor of building contractor against third persons for damages for unlawful interference with building contract is for damage to specific property, that is, the contractor's building contract, and constitutes "property, right, title or interest, legal or equitable," which could be reached by suit in equity by creditor of building contractor under statute, notwithstanding action was pending and cause of action had not been reduced to judgment.—*Bethlehem Fabricators v. Interest subject to execution

(1) In Illinois, under a statute authorizing the creditor to file a bill to reach any property or thing in action due to, or held in trust for, the debtor, a bill may be filed to reach the interest of the debtor in land under an unfulfilled contract of purchase, notwithstanding a statute providing that such interest may be sold as real estate on an execution.—McNab v. Heald, 41 Ill. 326.

(2) In Nebraska, an interest in land derived through an agreement for sale, although of an equitable nature, may be sold under an ordinary execution, and the creditor will not be permitted to resort to equity to reach it, unless the interest is shown "to be indefinite in its character or extent, or so clouded by apparent but really fraudulent or unreal adverse claims as would render the title of a purchaser at execution sale uncertain."—*Rosenfeld v. Creditors of person using land

Purchaser paying with own funds is entitled to let any one use land, and user's creditor is not thereby prejudiced.—McCarty v. Robinson, supra.

§ 31. — Rights Arising from Improving Land of Another or Paying Encumbrances Thereon

A creditors' bill may lie to reach interests arising from improving, or paying encumbrances on, the land of another.

A creditors' bill will lie to reach improvements made by the debtor on the real estate of another.⁶² The interest of an insolvent husband in improvements made by him upon real estate of his wife⁶³ or of an insolvent, father in improvements made on the land of his infant son of whom he is guardian,⁶⁴ or of an insolvent son on improvements made on the land of his father,⁶⁵ is subject to a creditors' bill for payment of the prior indebtedness of the husband or father, provided the improvements were made with fraudulent intent and the landowner participated therein.⁶⁶ This is also true of sums expended by an insolvent husband in paying encumbrances on property conveyed to his wife.⁶⁷

The rights of creditors generally in improvements made by a debtor on lands of another in fraud of creditors are discussed in the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances § 23, also 27 C.J. p 431 note 48-p 432 note 50. As stated infra § 33, the right of a cotenant to reimbursement from his cotenants for improvements cannot be reached by creditors, at least before partition. The right of creditors to reach the purchaser's equitable interest in land conveyed to another is discussed supra § 28.

§ 32. — Salary

Salaries earned before filing a creditors' bill may be reached thereby; but unearned salaries, or salaries assigned before the filing of the bill, cannot be reached.

Salary completely earned before the filing of the bill by performance of all services required to entitle the debtor thereto may be subjected to the payment of his debts,⁶⁸ although not payable when the bill is filed;⁶⁹ but unearned salary is not reachable, since neither the creditor nor the court could compel the debtor to work out his part of the contract and earn the salary for the use of the creditor;⁷⁰ and salary assigned before the filing of the bill cannot be reached.⁷¹

The right of creditors to reach the salary due a public officer has been discussed supra § 17.

§ 33. — Undivided Interests in General

An undivided interest in notes and a mortgage is subject to a creditors' bill; but such bill does not lie to subject real estate owned jointly. The right of a cotenant to reimbursement for improvements on the land cannot be reached by a creditors' bill, at least before partition.

It has been held that an undivided interest in notes and a mortgage is subject to a creditors' bill,⁷² but that a bill does not lie to subject real estate owned jointly, since the remedy at law is adequate.⁷³ The right of a cotenant to reimbursement from his cotenants for improvements made on the land cannot be reached by creditors' bill, at least not in advance of partition.⁷⁴

§ 34. — Other Interests or Rights

Various other property rights or interests have been held subject or not subject to a creditors' bill, according to their character and the particular circumstances of the case.

A creditors' bill will not lie to reach and compel a debtor to appropriate money that he has obtained by mortgage and which he has in his possession to the payment of his debt;⁷⁵ but an equitable interest in money in possession of another may in a proper case be subjected.⁷⁶ A note se-

Money not subject

(1) Where, at time of execution of contract for sale of standing timber by several owners, one of owners was indebted to another and payments on debtor-owner's share of purchase price of timber were made to creditor-owner pursuant to written contract, prior judgment creditor of debtor-owner was not entitled to recover amount of payments from executor of creditor-owner, where total amount of payments was less than amount due creditor-owner.—Yates v. Cockerham, 87 P.2d 269, 156 Or. 245.

(2) Where one of several vendors of standing timber foreclosed mort-cured by deed of trust belonging to a judgment debtor may be subjected in equity to the satisfaction of the judgment, and a sale under the trust deed ordered to pay it;⁷⁷ but a creditor cannot reach a note or mortgage made to the debtor who held the record title to the mortgage and had assigned the note and mortgage to the real owner without recording the assignment.⁷⁸

Exempt property. Property expressly exempted at law from execution cannot be reached by a creditors' bill.⁷⁹

Patents and royalties. The interest of a debtor in letters patent may be reached by proper proceedings in equity and subjected to the payment of his debts;⁸⁰ this is not so, however, in the case of an unpatented invention.⁸¹ Royalties under a license contract may be reached by a creditors' bill,⁸² and a license to use a patented invention may be subjected to the payment of a judgment against the licensee for nonpayment of royalties;⁸³ but a contract with the nonresident owner of a patent for payment of royalties in the future cannot be reached by a creditors' bill against the owner of the patent who is not personally served in the state.⁸⁴ Where a patentee transfers his patent in fraud of creditors and the assignee receives shares of stock in a corporation organized on the basis of the patent, the shares are subject to the claims of creditors.⁸⁵

Pension money. Pension money, after it reaches the debtor, is not exempt, and land purchased therewith, the title to which is fraudulently taken in the name of the pensioner's wife, may be reached by a creditors' bill.⁸⁶

Property of Indians. Personal property owned by Indians by blood can be reached by a creditors' suit and put in the hands of a receiver.⁸²

Right of turnpike company to levy assessment. Where a turnpike company has power to assess property to pay for construction and to return the assessment for collection by the sheriff, a creditor whose claim is incurred in the construction may invoke the aid of equity, after a return of "no property," for collection and appropriation of the tax to payment of his claim.⁸⁸

Membership in exchange or club. In some cases it is held that a membership or seat in a stock exchange or a merchants' exchange, which has a money value and is transferable subject to the election of the purchaser as a member and to the rules of the exchange, is property subject to a creditors' bill.⁸⁹ Other authorities maintain that such a seat is not property but a mere license or privilege to participate in the transactions of the exchange, and therefore cannot be subjected to claims of creditors,⁹⁰ especially where the rules

gage on lands belonging to another vendor and bid such lands in at foreclosure sale, prior judgment creditor of vendor whose land was mortgaged would not be entitled to money received by vendor who foreclosed mortgage and his executor under contract for sale of timber to be applied on judgment, where, after foreclosure and sale, timber on foreclosed lands was cut, removed, and paid for by buyer, and moneys distributed as if no foreclosure had been had, and foreclosed lands without timber were of but little value, and transaction with all sums paid was insufficient to satisfy indebtedness owed to vendor holding mortgage.—Yates v. Cockerham, supra.

Condemnation award

If debtor had conveyed land before condemnation thereof, debtor's creditor could not have part of condemnation judgment applied to satisfaction of creditor's judgment, as against contention that mortgagee of debtor's transferee had no right to collect the condemnation judgment because its trust deed was not executed until after condemnation judgment was rendered.—Faxton v. Gubbins, 21 N.E.2d 300, 371 Ill. 435.

Money due on promissory note

Under Rhode Island statute, judgment creditor could not by creditor's bill reach money due debtor upon third persons' promissory note without alleging fraud or trust, since statute exempting from attachment debts secured by notes specifically exempts such debts from reach of creditor's bill, as against creditor's construction of statute that reason for exemptions was to protect debtor in necessities of life and not from payment of just debts.—*Berard v. of the exchange provide that, in case a member becomes insolvent, his seat shall be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of his debts to other members.⁹¹ So it has been held that membership in an exchange may be reached by a creditors' bill only where the court can compel an involuntary transfer.⁹² Club membership is not property in the broad sense and cannot be reached by creditors' bill.⁹³

§ 35. Creditors Entitled to Relief

- a. In general
- b. Assignor and assignee
- c. Persons entitled by subrogation

a. In General

Various creditors have been held to be competent to maintain a creditors' suit.

Various creditors have been held to be competent to maintain a creditors' suit,⁹⁴ although, as is shown in § 43 infra, ordinarily the suit may not be brought by a general creditor.

Under a statute authorizing general or judgment creditors to file a bill for discovery of assets, and permitting any number of creditors to join as complainants, relief may be granted, although the claims of some of the complainants contain waivers of exemption.⁹⁵ A judgment creditor will not be denied the right to bring a creditors' bill because he is not beneficially interested where the interested person does not controvert his right to maintain the bill.⁹⁶

A judgment creditor is not precluded from maintaining a bill to reach a fund belonging to the debtor because there are other creditors having a superior right to the fund, where they are taking no steps to assert that right;⁹⁷ nor by the fact that a receiver has been appointed for the debtor who might assert a right to the fund for the benefit of all creditors where the receiver is not doing so.⁹⁸

The rule that a cestui que trust suing in his own name must explain why the suit is not brought by the trustee does not apply to a creditor who seeks by subrogation to take advantage of the existence of a deed given to trustees to secure indorsers on the debtor's notes, including plaintiff's, where the sole duty of the trustees is to hold the property until defeasance, and they have no power over it or authority to foreclose.⁹⁹

Creditor of deceased debtor. As is explained in the C.J.S. title Executors and Administrators § 473, also 24 C.J. p 455 note 81, the creditor of a deceased debtor may file a creditors' bill.

Parties plaintiff in creditors suits are considered in § 55 infra.

b. Assignor and Assignee

The assignor of a judgment ordinarily may not maintain a creditors' bill, but such a bill may be maintained by an assignee.

Ordinarily a creditor who has assigned his judgment may not maintain a creditor's suit thereon,¹ except by agreement with the assignee.² This rule applies to a creditor who assigns his judgment as collateral security where it does not appear by the bill that the assignee has neglected or refused to sue under circumstances calculated to prejudice the rights of the assignor.³

Where complainant assigns his claim pending the action, the suit may not be continued in his name on behalf of the other creditors if the assignee demands its discontinuance.⁴

Where the bill alleges ownership in the assignor, the fact that one defendant has become the assignee will not enable the assignor to maintain

94. Insolvent creditor

The insolvency of a creditor is no objection to a bill filed by him in behalf of himself and other creditors.—White v. Russell, 79 Ill. 155.

Motive of creditor

A creditor's right to maintain a bill to reach equitable interests of the debtor in corporate stock is not affected by the fact that he is prompted to bring the suit by other stockholders who, with him, desire to gain control of the corporation.—McMullen v. the bill, as the evidence showing the assignment would also show that he had no right of action.⁵

Where a creditor assigns all interest in a judgment to a third person prior to the filing of the bill, the defense must be made by plea or answer, and defendant cannot afterward have the bill dismissed if complainant within a time limited by the court files a supplemental bill to bring the assignee before the court;⁶ but where the suit is properly commenced, and thereafter complainant assigns his judgment either in whole or in part, defendant may apply to the court to have the bill dismissed unless the assignee, within a prescribed time, be brought in by supplemental bill.⁷

Assignee. An assignee may maintain a creditors' bill,⁸ and, as is observed in § 55 infra, in some jurisdictions the bill may be maintained by the assignee in his own name without joining the assignor.

Consideration for assignment. Where the bill is filed by the assignee of the judgment, the consideration for the assignment may not be questioned by defendant;⁹ nor can defendant set up that the assignment was made in fraud of the creditors of the assignor.¹⁰ So the assignee of a note on which judgment has been recovered may maintain a bill in his own name, although the assignment was merely for the purpose of vesting the legal title in him without conferring any beneficial interest.¹¹

The authorities are in conflict on the questions whether a creditors' suit may be maintained by a surety or indorser who has paid a judgment or by a purchaser whose money has been used to pay lien creditors.

Where a surety or an indorser pays a judgment against himself and the principal, he becomes subrogated to the rights of plaintiff in the judgment, see the C.J.S. title Subrogation § 47, also 60 C.J. p 740 note 6 et seq., and it has been held that the surety or indorser is entitled to go into equity to enforce the judgment without obtaining any other judgment.¹² However, this rule does not prevail in all states.¹³

Furthermore, it has been held that where a purchaser under a void decree, on disaffirmance of the sale, has been substituted to the rights of creditors whose liens his money has paid, he may maintain a bill to enforce such rights, and, as incident to the relief sought, may make his bill a creditors' bill;¹⁴ but there is authority to the contrary.¹⁵

Since a creditor is entitled to the benefit of any security given by the principal to a surety for the payment of the debt, he is entitled to maintain a creditors' bill to reach such security.¹⁶

§ 36. Persons against Whom Relief Obtainable

Unless authorized by statute, a creditors' bill may not be filed against a nonresident or against a county.

A creditors' suit may be filed only against proper persons.¹⁷

Although the property sought to be subjected is within the jurisdiction of the court, a court of equity may not proceed as against a nonresident, unless it is empowered to act in rem under enabling statutes.¹⁸

A court of equity may assume jurisdiction of a bill filed by a nonresident plaintiff against a nonresident debtor if there be also a resident debtor.¹⁹

pany, such ventilating company having installed a grain drying apparatus for the elevator company's predecessor, will not be heard in equity to insist that the ventilating company should not be permitted to prosecute its action based on a valid judgment against the predecessor of the elevator company to cancel conveyances by the elevator company's predecessor as a cloud on title to the realty, or to declare the judgment thereon.—Hess Warming & Ventilating Co. v. Counties. Where suits against counties are placed on the same footing as those against individuals, see Counties § 319, a creditors' bill may be filed against them or their designated representatives;²¹ but in the absence of statutory authority a county may not be thus sued.²²

§ 37. Form of Remedy

As is explained in § 53 infra, a court of equity ordinarily has jurisdiction of a creditors' suit. Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 38. Conditions Precedent in General

To maintain a creditors' suit there must be a compliance with the prescribed conditions precedent.

To maintain a creditors' suit the various conditions precedent, discussed in §§ 40-49 infra, must be complied with.²³

In Corporations § 1438 are considered the conditions precedent in a creditors' suit against a corporation, and the conditions precedent to an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance are discussed in the C.J.S. title Fraudulent Conveyances §§ 326-336, also 27 C.J. p 723 note 19-p 747 note 69.

§ 39. Exhausting Remedies at Law

As is explained in § 41 infra, a creditor ordinarily must exhaust his remedies at law in order to maintain a creditors' bill. Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 40. Acknowledgment or Establishment of Debt in General

For purposes of a creditors' bill the acknowledgment of the debt is equivalent to its establishment by judgment.

As is explained in § 43 infra, ordinarily a judgment at law is a prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditors' suit. However, in some cases it has been held that the admission or acknowledgment of the debt is equivalent to its establishment by a judgment.²⁴ In other words, the objection that complainant's claim has not been reduced to judgment is one which can be raised only by defendant, and may be waived by failure to set it up.²⁵

§ 41. Exhausting Ordinary Legal Remedies in General

As a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' bill, a creditor ordinarily must exhaust his remedies at law.

Ordinarily, before a creditor seeking to subject property of the debtor not seizable on execution to the payment of his debt will be assisted in equity, he must have exhausted the remedies afforded him by courts of law.²⁶ However, it has been held that a lien creditor may bring a creditors' bill without having first exhausted his remedies at law.²⁷ Statutes requiring the exhaustion of legal remedies before resorting to equity must be strictly complied with, and every fact must exist as required thereby before the aid intended to be afforded may be invoked.²⁸

Bill to reach land outside of jurisdiction. Without showing special grounds for the intervention of equity a creditors' suit may not be maintained merely because the only property of the debtor is land in another jurisdiction, but rather the creditor must pursue the legal remedy afforded by the laws of the other jurisdiction.²⁹

Waiver of objection. The objection that complainant has an adequate remedy at law may, it has been held, be waived by defendant.³⁰ The objection is waived by an admission in the answer of the allegations of the bill.³¹

On the other hand, it has been held that the objection is not waived by failure to raise it by demurrer.³² The failure of defendant to plead in his answer that there exists an adequate remedy at law has been held not to constitute a waiver,³³ although there is contrary authority.³⁴

Abolition of distinction between law and equity. Where statutes abolish the distinction between law and equity and give to the same court power to administer each kind of relief, see Actions §§ 55, 56, it has been held, in some jurisdictions, that the rule requiring a creditor to exhaust his remedies at law before resorting to a creditors' bill no longer exists.³⁵ In such jurisdictions a creditor may sue to recover a judgment for an indebtedness and in the same action avail himself of the equitable powers of the court to reach property of the debtor which should be subjected to the payment of his indebtedness.³⁶

In other states, however, the rule has been enforced in spite of the blending of the jurisdictions at law and in equity.³⁷

§ 42. Recovery of Judgment

The necessity for the acquisition of a judgment as a condition precedent to a creditors' suit is discussed in §§ 43-45 infra, and in § 46 thereafter the character of the judgment required is considered. Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 43. — Necessity

- a. In general
- b. Exceptions and limitations

a. In General

As a general rule a judgment at law is a prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditors' suit.

As a general rule, sometimes by reason of statutory regulation, it is a prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditors' bill seeking satisfaction out of equitable assets or choses in action not reachable by execution at law that the creditor establish his claim or debt by a judgment at law; a general creditor with a mere legal demand may not, in the absence of statutory authorization, come into equity to collect his claim.³⁸

b. Exceptions and Limitations

- (1) In general
- (2) Statutory exceptions

(1) In General

There are several exceptions to the general rule requiring a judgment at law as a condition precedent to the filing of a creditors' bill.

To the general rule that a creditors' bill may not be maintained without a judgment at law first obtained there are exceptions.⁴⁴ The general rule affects the remedy only and not the right, and the recovery of a judgment is not an indispensable requisite where it is impossible or impracticable.⁴⁵ Furthermore, if complainant's demand is of a purely equitable nature, recognizable only by a court of equity, he need not first establish it in an independent suit, but may do so in the creditors' suit to reach the equitable assets of the debtor.⁴⁶ In addition, where the purpose of the bill is to reach the interest of the debtor in property or funds held in trust for him or for his creditors, the claim need not first be established by a judgment at law.⁴⁷

Restraining action at law. It is no excuse for failure to procure judgment that the prosecution of the action at law was restrained by an order of court, where it does not appear that the order was made without complainant's consent or that any attempt was made to vacate it.⁴⁸

Awards. Parties holding an equitable lien for services in securing an appropriation from congress, in whose favor a specific award has been made under an agreement to arbitrate, may maintain a creditors' bill on the award without reducing their demand to judgment;⁴⁹ but an award of arbitrators appointed under agreement of the parties is not in itself sufficient to support a bill.⁵⁰

(2) Statutory Exceptions

Where dispensed with by statute, a judgment at law is not a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit.

Where statutes so provide, the reduction of a claim to a judgment at law is not a prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditors' suit.⁵¹ Such statutes have been held to be valid,⁵² although, as appears in the C.J.S. title Equity § 19, also 21 C.J. p 44 note 71, state statutes authorizing general creditors to maintain a creditors' bill are not binding on the federal courts.

Pursuant to statutory regulation in some states, a creditors' bill may be filed before a judgment at law is obtained, provided an action at law is pending for the collection of the claim, although no final decree may be entered on such creditors' bill until the claim has been reduced to a judgment at law.⁵³ The statute alters the general rule only in so far as to permit the filing of a creditors' bill prior to the rendition of a judgment at law; a judgment at law is essential before a final decree in equity may be entered.⁵⁴ Where the creditor has not reduced his claim to judgment, under such statute no creditors' bill may be filed until an action at law is pending for the collection of the claim.⁵⁵ The institution of a suit at law for damages not involving a claim of indebtedness does not warrant a creditors' suit under such statute.⁵⁶

56. Fla.—B. L. E. Realty Corpora-

As is disclosed in § 41 supra, in some jurisdictions where the distinction between law and equity has been abolished, a creditor in one action may reduce his debt to judgment and invoke the equitable powers of the court to reach the property of the debtor.

In Massachusetts, under the statutes, a debt need not be reduced to judgment in order to entitle the creditor to maintain a bill in equity to reach and apply to the payment of the debt property of defendant which cannot be attached or taken on execution at law.⁵⁷ This remedy was not taken away or limited by the subsequent legislative grant to the court of general equity powers;⁵⁸ and the statutes have been held to apply even though the debt is secured by mortgage.⁵⁹ Nevertheless, to authorize the maintenance of such a bill the debt must have matured,⁶⁰ and where it appears that the property sought to be reached can be attached at law the bill may not be maintained.⁶¹

§ 44. — Insolvent Debtor

Where the debtor is insolvent, the authorities are in conflict as to whether a judgment is a prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditors' suit.

As an exception to the general rule discussed in § 43 a supra, it has been held that the procuring of a judgment and the issuance of execution thereon and its return unsatisfied is but one form of proof of the creditors' want of remedy at law; that insolvency of the debtor may be otherwise established; and that where it is shown that judgment and execution would be fruitless and involve useless expense, a creditor may maintain a bill to reach equitable interests of his debtor without first obtaining a judgment at law.⁶² According to other decisions, however, a creditor must reduce his claim to judgment, notwithstanding the debtor is insolvent.⁶³ Insolvency of the debtor is no excuse where, under the statute, see § 43 b (2) supra, a creditors' bill may be filed only by a creditor who either has reduced his claim to judgment, or has instituted an action at law for its collection.⁶⁴

At any rate, where the statute so provides, no judgment is necessary where the debtor is insolvent.⁶⁵ Furthermore, where the fund sought to be reached is beyond legal process, the debtor is insolvent, and the claim of complainant is undisputed, it has been held that a creditors' bill may be maintained although no judgment is first had establishing the debt.⁶⁶

§ 45. — Nonresident or Absconding Debtor

Where a debtor has absconded, or is a nonresident, and legal remedies are unavailable, a judgment at law ordinarily is not a prerequisite to the maintenance of a creditors' suit.

As an exception to the general rule stated in § 43 a supra, where a debtor has absconded or absented himself from the state so that personal service cannot be had and judgment may not be rendered, and he has no property in the state subject to seizure at law, a creditors' bill to subject the equitable interests of the debtor within the state may be maintained without a judgment at law establishing the debt first having been obtained;⁶⁷ and the same rule applies where the debtor,

What constitutes "debt" within statute

(1) A claim of unliquidated damages for breach of executory contract is not a "debt" within the statute.—Stone, Timlow & Co. v. Stryker, 119 N.E. 655, 230 Mass. 67—H. G. Kilbourne Co. v. Standard Stamp Affixer Co., 103 N.E. 469, 216 Mass. 118.

(2) Liability of trustee to others for breach of trust, established in suit in equity, is a "debt" within Rev.L. c 159 § 3 cl 7.—Digney v. Blanchard, 118 N.E. 250, 229 Mass. 235.

Discharge in bankruptcy

Suits under statute to apply debtor's interests in payment of debt cannot be maintained where liability for debt cannot be established be-

although he has not absconded, has removed to another state wherein he has no property.⁶⁸

Where the debtor is a nonresident, it has been held that a judgment at law is not a prerequisite,⁶⁹ but this has been denied,⁷⁰ especially where judgment might have been obtained in the state of the debtor's residence.⁷¹ In any event, where the debtor has visible property in the jurisdiction that may be reached by attachment at law nonresidence alone will not authorize the filing of a creditors' bill in the first instance to enforce a purely legal demand.⁷²

If a creditor in another state where the debtor resides has obtained judgment and issued execution in that state, thus exhausting the legal remedy, it has been held that he has sufficiently complied with the rule requiring that the legal remedy be exhausted before a creditor's suit may be brought.⁷³

If there is an action pending at law in which no process has been served on the debtor and the debtor will enter an appearance therein, proceedings in equity may be stayed to await the result of the action at law.⁷⁴

Suits against joint debtors. Where one joint debtor has absconded and the other is dead, a bill will lie to reach joint equitable funds without first obtaining a judgment at law.⁷⁵ Where one joint debtor has removed from the jurisdiction so that process cannot be served on him in an action at law, and the other is insolvent, so that a judgment against him cannot be satisfied, and the only asset of the nonresident debtor within the jurisdiction or elsewhere is an equitable interest in real estate in the jurisdiction, a bill is main-tainable to subject such interest to payment of the debt without the debt being first reduced to judgment.⁷⁶

Furthermore, if one of two joint obligors is out of the state, it has been held that the obligee may proceed in chancery to subject the absentee's choses in action to the payment of the debt without first prosecuting the resident obligor to insolvency;⁷⁷ but, on the other hand, it has been held that where the creditor has an adequate remedy at law against a resident joint debtor, he may not maintain a bill to subject the assets of the nonresident debtor without first obtaining a judgment at law against him.⁷⁸

§ 46. — Character and Sufficiency of Judgment

- a. In general
- b. Decree in equity
- c. Jurisdiction of court
- d. Judgment of other courts

a. In General

To support a creditors' suit the judgment required must be a valid, subsisting judgment, a judgment which is not dormant, and which has not been set aside, appealed from, or satisfied.

The judgment required as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit, see § 43 supra, must be a valid and subsisting judgment.⁷⁹ A void judgment is not sufficient.⁸⁰

The judgment must have been duly entered and perfected,⁸¹ and, except as the rule has been changed by statute, see § 43 b (2) supra, it is not sufficient that an action at law is pending which may result in judgment,⁸² or that a verdict has been recovered.⁸³

Docketing and filing of transcript. Where the object of the bill is to reach land of the debtor, a statute making it necessary to docket the judgment in a particular county or in a particular court in order that it shall constitute a lien on the land must be complied with.⁸⁴

Dormant judgments. To justify a creditors' suit, the judgment at law must be one still in force; a dormant judgment is not a sufficient basis for the suit.⁸⁵ However, the dormancy of the judgment does not defeat the bill where the debtor had previously been taken in execution and had obtained his discharge as an insolvent and where he admits that he has no tangible property.⁸⁶

While there is authority to the contrary,⁸⁷ the fact that, after bill filed and before decree, complainant's judgment at law becomes dormant will not preclude his maintaining his bill, nor need he have his judgment revived and execution again issued thereon in order to entitle him to a decree.⁸⁸ Furthermore, where the bill is filed within the statutory period during which a judgment continues to be a lien, and within the time allowed by statute in which an action may be brought thereon, it has been held that it is immaterial that complainant would not be entitled to issue an execution until he revived the judgment by scire facias;⁸⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁹⁰

Where the judgment is valid and enforceable by execution, it has been held that a creditor may maintain a bill although the lien of the judgment on real estate has expired.⁹¹

Opening or vacating judgment. Where, pending a creditors' suit, the judgment at law on which it is based is set aside by the court which rendered it, the bill will be dismissed.⁹² However, a creditors' bill may be maintained against one of two defendants against whom judgment has been recovered, notwithstanding that for cause shown the court has set aside the judgment as against the other defendant, where the court has allowed the judgment to stand as a several judgment.⁹³

Where a creditors' bill has been properly filed on an execution returned unsatisfied, and where defendant is afterward let in to make defense in the action at law, leaving the judgment to stand as a security to the adverse party, the regular course is to stay proceedings in chancery until final decision of the court of law.⁹⁴

Pendency of appeal or writ of error. A creditors' bill may not be based on a judgment in favor of complainant where an appeal, or a proceeding in error to reverse the same, is pending,⁹⁵ provided that the appeal has been so perfected as to operate as a stay of execution.⁹⁶ However, a writ of error brought after the filing of a creditors' bill does not necessarily stay the proceedings in equity, even where the security on the writ of error is given in such form as to make the sureties liable for the debt and costs in the court below as well as for the costs on the writ of error.⁹⁷

Satisfaction of judgment. A judgment that has been satisfied will not support a creditors' bill.⁹⁸

Delay in perfecting appeal

When a judgment rendered by a justice of the peace is appealed from, and no effort is made by appellant for a period of more than four years to perfect such appeal, he cannot set up as a defense, in a collateral proceeding in equity to subject his property to the payment of the judgment, that an appeal therefrom was pending.—Warder v. Rivers, 20 N.W. 739, 64 Iowa 412.

Subrogation of person paying judgment to rights of creditor see supra § 35 c.

Where a judgment debtor is taken in custody under a capias ad satisfaciendum, it is presumed to be a satisfaction of the judgment, see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 573, also 34 C.J. p 721 note 16, and as long as the debtor remains in custody, no creditors' bill may be brought against him by plaintiff in the execution.⁹⁹ However, the discharge of a debtor under the Honest Debtor's Act, whose body had been taken on a capias, has no effect other than to exempt the person of the debtor from future arrest, and does not relieve his property from liability for his debt, and hence a creditors' bill may be maintained notwithstanding such discharge.¹

Merger by action on judgment. Where the judgment is sued on and another judgment is recovered without effecting a merger of the first judgment, see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 561, also 34 C.J. p 697 note 93 et seq, the first judgment possesses sufficient vitality on which to base a creditors' bill.² For example, where the second judgment is recovered in another state, the first judgment is sufficient to support the bill.³

b. Decree in Equity

Decrees in equity for specific sums of money, enforceable by execution, are sufficient on which to base a creditors' suit.

Decrees in equity for specific sums of money, enforceable by execution in the same manner as judgments at law, constitute liens on the property of the debtor to the same extent as ordinary judgments, and may be made the basis of creditors' bills.⁴

It has been held that a decree in a foreclosure suit that defendant is personally liable for the debt and requiring him to pay any deficiency after confirmation of the sale does not render complainant a decree creditor, so as to enable him to maintain a creditors' bill against defendant;⁵ but there is authority to the contrary;⁶ and it has been held that an order requiring the purchaser at a foreclosure sale to pay the expenses and deficiencies occasioned by his omission to complete the purchase is a sufficient foundation on which to base a creditors' bill.⁷

To justify a creditors' suit the judgment required must have been rendered by a court having jurisdiction.

The judgment required as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit must have been rendered by a court having jurisdiction,⁸ and, if the court had jurisdiction, the judgment may not, as is shown in § 51 infra, be attacked collaterally in the creditors' suit. The judgment is sufficient if it has been recovered in a court of general jurisdiction.⁹

Jurisdiction of person. The court must have had jurisdiction of the person of defendant in the action in which the judgment was rendered.¹⁰ Ordinarily, the judgment at law must be a personal one.¹¹ However, a judgment is none the less personal because the word "trustee" is added after the name of defendant, this being merely descriptive.¹²

d. Judgment of Other Courts

The judgment required as a prerequisite to a creditors' suit ordinarily must have been rendered in the particular jurisdiction in which the creditors' bill is filed.

Ordinarily, the judgment required must be one rendered in the particular jurisdiction where the creditors' bill is filed,¹³ unless it is impossible to obtain a judgment in that jurisdiction.¹⁴ It has been held that a judgment of a federal court of one district will not support a creditors' bill filed in the federal court of another district.¹⁵

Judgment of sister state court. As a general rule, a creditors' bill may not be based on a judgment rendered in another state.¹⁶ However, in some cases judgments recovered in sister states have been held sufficient, but these cases usually contain special elements.¹⁷

Judgment of state court where suit in federal court. A federal court will take jurisdiction of a creditors' bill founded on a judgment rendered in a state court within the district over which the jurisdiction of the federal court extends.¹⁸ On the other hand, as a general rule a judgment at law in a state court may not be used as the basis of a creditors' bill in a federal court in another state,¹⁹ although there is some contrary authority.²⁰

Judgment of federal court where suit in state court. As a general rule, where the bill is filed in a state court, a judgment recovered in a United States court sitting in such state is sufficient.²¹ In some jurisdictions however, it has been held that the judgment of a federal court may not be made the basis of a decree in a state court,²² although such federal court is of the district in which the creditors' bill is filed, since such court is deemed to be a court of another jurisdiction.²³

§ 47. Execution and Return

- a. Necessity for execution
- b. Character and sufficiency of execution
- c. Return

a. Necessity for Execution

- (1) In general
- (2) Where several plaintiffs or defendants
- (3) Insolvent debtor

(1) In General

The issuance of an execution on the judgment obtained, including a decree in equity, ordinarily is a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit. After return of an execution unsatisfied an assignee need not take out an execution.

In addition to the necessity for obtaining a judgment, see § 43 a supra, a creditor is generally required to have execution issued and returned unsatisfied, in whole or in part, before a court of equity will entertain a creditors' bill.²⁴ However, this rule does not deny to a creditor the aid of equity where it is impossible or impracticable for him to take this preliminary step,²⁵ or where the legal remedy is inadequate;²⁶ nor where the debtor is a non-resident so that no personal judgment can be obtained against him.²⁷ Furthermore, the issuance of an execution is unnecessary where it is dispensed with by statutory regulation.²⁸

Necessity for resort to other evidence

By the nonresidence of a debtor, a creditor, through no fault of his own, is deprived of evidence of nonexistence of property of debtor subject to execution afforded by a nulla bona return on an execution, for in such case creditor cannot obtain a personal judgment on which to issue an execution, so that a creditor must resort to other evidence to show that he has exhausted his legal remedies before seeking relief in equity.—O'Connell v. Smith, supra.

28. W.Va.—U. S. Fidelity & Guaranty Co. v. Eary, 181 S.E. 817, 116 W.Va. 477.

15 C.J. p 1395 note 43.

Nature of statutory action

Statutory action allowing a bill to be filed after judgment, without or before execution, on the ground of

It is no excuse for failure to have execution issued and returned nulla bona that the prosecution of a suit brought by complainant was restrained by order of court, where it does not appear that the order was made without the consent of the complainant, or that any attempt has been made to vacate it;²⁹ nor is it any excuse that the enforcement of an execution was restrained by a military order.³⁰

Execution on decree in equity. A decree in equity for the payment of money stands on the same footing as a judgment at law, and execution must be issued thereon and returned nulla bona in order that it may be a proper foundation for a creditors' bill.³¹ However, where the creditor's only remedy is in equity, it has been held that the issuance of an execution on the decree obtained is not necessary in order to reach the equitable assets of the debtor.³²

Acquisition of lien by creditor. Where a judgment creates a lien on the debtor's interest in land, see the C.J.S. title Judgments § 454, also 34 C.J. p 569 note 83, in some jurisdictions, in order to reach a debtor's interest in land, no execution is necessary.³³ Furthermore, it has been held that a creditor's bill to subject equitable interests of a debtor to the payment of a judgment may be maintained without showing a levy on the property sought to be reached or a sale thereof in execution.³⁴

Body execution. A creditor need not have the body of the debtor taken into custody, even where the law permits it, where execution has issued against the property of the debtor and been returned nulla bona.³⁵

Alias execution. After the lapse of a certain period of time since the return of the original execution unsatisfied, as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' bill the issuance of a new execution has been held necessary³⁶ and unnecessary.³⁷

Where a judgment is revived, a new execution has been held to be necessary before the bill may be filed.³⁸ However, where the judgment is revived by scire facias in favor of personal representatives, it has been held to be unnecessary to sue out a new execution.³⁹

Where a supplemental bill shows that defendant has acquired property since the original execution was returned unsatisfied and prays for discovery, the bill may be sustained, although no second execution has been issued.⁴⁰

Assignee of judgment. An assignee of a judgment need not take out a new execution before filing a creditors' bill where his assignor had caused an execution to be issued which was returned nulla bona.⁴¹

(2) Where Several Plaintiffs or Defendants

Execution must issue and be returned unsatisfied against all of the defendants. If there are several plaintiffs, the failure of one to issue execution may be excused.

If two judgment creditors unite in the bill, and one has issued an execution which has been returned unsatisfied, the failure of the other so to do is excused where the averments of the bill are in proper form.⁴²

Where there are several defendants in the judgment, complainant must show the issuance and reno property on which to levy, is in the nature of an equitable attachment or execution and not the pursuit of a trust fund.—Harris v. Cincinnati, H. & D. Ry. Co., 5 Ohio N.P., N.S., 173.

In Florida

The rule that a creditor can resort to his remedy by means of a creditors' bill only after he has secured a judgment at law and has exhausted all means afforded by law to recover on such judgment and has had a return of the execution that no goods of the debtor are to be found was not altered by statute, see § 43 b (2) supra, providing that creditors' bill might be filed after action at law was begun and before rendition of final judgment therein.—*Stewart v. turn unsatisfied of execution against all of the defendants,⁴³ unless one defendant is in the position of a surety toward the others,⁴⁴ and the bill is brought with his consent and for his benefit.⁴⁵

The exhaustion of the remedy at law against a person who was an indorser on an instrument merged into judgment, and who was not a party to the judgment proceedings, is not essential to the maintenance of an equitable action against the judgment debtors.⁴⁶

(3) Insolvent Debtor

Where the debtor is insolvent, as a general rule the issuance and return of an execution unsatisfied are not conditions precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit.

As a general rule, when it appears that the debtor is insolvent, the issuance of execution and a return of nulla bona are not necessary, since their purpose is to establish insolvency of the debtor and want of remedy at law, and where the debtor is shown to be insolvent by other evidence and the issuance of execution would be of no practical utility, it may be dispensed with.⁴⁷ However, there are decisions to the contrary.⁴⁸

At any rate, whether or not execution and return of nulla bona are essential, it has been said that they are the most satisfactory evidence of insolvency, and such proof should be produced when convenient.⁴⁹

b. Character and Sufficiency of Execution

To support a creditors' suit, the required execution must be valid and must comply with statutory requirements; it must be issued within the proper time, to the proper county, and must be directed to the realty of the debtor as well as to his personality.

The execution required as a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit must be a valid one,⁵⁰ and must have been issued in compliance with statutory requirements.⁵¹

Time of issuance. Where the premature issuance of an execution renders it voidable only, see the C. J. S. title Executions § 66, also 23 C. J. p 379 note 8, such execution is sufficient for the purpose of a creditors' suit.⁵² Where no execution was issued to the proper county for a long period of time, the defense of laches applies, at least as to personal property.⁵³

To what county issued. Ordinarily, the execution should be issued to the county of the debtor's residence,⁵⁴ or to the county in which the judgment was rendered.⁵⁵ Where a debtor has no real

Direction as to levy on land

Execution against county

A fieri facias issued against a county and returned nulla bona lays ground for a creditors' bill. The remedy by compelling the supervisors to levy a tax on the county is cumulative and does not necessarily prohibit the ordinary course of issuing execution.—Lyell v. St. Clair County, C.C.Mich., 15 F.Cas.No. 8,621, 3 McLean 580.

Delay in delivery to sheriff

Where executions on judgments were not placed in the hands of the sheriff until the return day thereof, such delay rendered them a nullity, and unsatisfied returns thereon were insufficient basis for proceedings in the nature of a creditor's bill against the judgment debtor.—De Guzman v. Shepherd, 196 N.W. 523, 225 Mich. 606.

or personal property in the county where he resides liable to levy and sale on execution, the issuance of an execution in the county where the judgment is recovered, and its return unsatisfied, is sufficient.⁵⁶ If, however, plaintiff knows that defendant in the execution has property in a particular county execution should be sent there.⁵⁷

Directions as to property to be taken. An execution directed merely against the personality of the debtor is not sufficient; it must be one that might be levied also on his real estate.⁵⁸

In the absence of statute, the exhaustion of personal property is not required before a creditor may have recourse to equitable interests in real estate.⁵⁹ However, as is shown in the C.J.S. title Executions § 100, also 23 C.J. p 445 note 72, in some jurisdictions, by statute or otherwise, the rule is that the debtor has the right to have his personal goods exhausted before any of his realty may be taken on execution. Furthermore, in the administration of decedents' estates, see the C.J.S. titles Descent and Distribution § 121, also 18 C.J. p 944 note 50, and Executors and Administrators § 479, also 24 C.J. p 461 note 38, the personality is the primary fund for the payment of debts.

c. Return

- (1) Necessity for return
- (2) Sufficiency of return
- (3) Operation and effect

(1) Necessity for Return

To support a creditors' suit the execution must be returned unsatisfied, although an outstanding alias execution ordinarily does not bar the suit.

The mere issuance of execution on the creditor's judgment is not sufficient; it must be returned unsatisfied, since the creditor must ordinarily show that he is remediless at law, and of this the issuance of an execution and its return unsatisfied are the most acceptable proof.⁶⁰

Mattingly, 40 S.W. 673, 101 Ky. 219.
15 C.J. p 1397 note 72.

Where several defendants reside in several counties different from that in which the judgment was rendered, the issuing of an execution against all of them to the county where one of them resides, and its return nulla bona does not authorize the maintenance of an equitable action on such return against those who do not reside in the county to which the execution was issued.—Proctor v. Bell, 30 S.W. 15, 97 Ky. 98, 16 Ky.L. 823.

57. Ill.—Corn v. Greenberg, 181 Ill. App. 669.
15 C.J. p 1397 notes 68, 74.

Land in other county insufficient

If it appears that land situated in a county other than that in which execution issued is entirely inadequate to satisfy the judgment, execution need not issue to the county where the land lies.—Thompson v. La Rue, 81 N.W. 612, 59 Neb. 614.

Parcels of land in many counties

Where defendant has land in many different counties, the whole of which would not be more than sufficient to pay the debt, the court will not require plaintiff, before filing his bill, to take out numerous successive executions which would necessitate great delay in collecting the judgment, allowing a term for each execution.—Albany City Bank v. Dorr, Walk, Mich., 317.

In Tennessee

(1) It is sufficient if the creditor shows an exhaustion of his legal remedy by the return unsatisfied of an execution issued in the county in which the judgment was recovered without also issuing an execution to the county in which the assets sought to be reached are situated, or. It seems, the county of the debtor's residence.—Riddle v. Motley, 1 Lea 468.

(2) Where the object of the bill is to reach equitable, personal assets, the return unsatisfied of an execution issued to the sheriff of the county in which the judgment was rendered shows that the judgment creditor has exhausted his legal remedies, and entitles him to proceed in equity without issuing an execution to the county wherein such assets are situated.—Embree v. Reeve, 6 Humphr. 37.

Return of execution generally see the C.J.S. title Executions §§ 314–330, also 23 C.J. p 791 note 47 et seq.

Suit after return but before filing thereof

An indorsement by a deputy sheriff on an execution, after more than sixty days from its issue, of a return of no property, and a delivery of the same by him to the officer in charge of the sheriff's office to be filed, is a sufficient return to sustain a creditors' suit commenced on that day, although the return is not filed with the county clerk until the next day.—Iselin v. Henlein, 7 N.Y.Civ.Proc.

Return on alias execution. After an execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, the issuance of an alias execution does not operate against the right of complainant to file a creditors' bill,⁶¹ unless it appears that the sheriff has levied or can levy the alias execution on property sufficient to satisfy the judgment, it being immaterial that the alias execution has been levied on property insufficient in value.⁶²

Where an execution is issued to the proper county and returned nulla bona, it is no defense to a creditors' bill founded thereon that an execution has been issued to another county and not returned.⁶³ However, where a fieri facias is levied on property of the debtor, and thereafter successive venditioni exponas with fieri facias clauses are issued and returned "stayed by the complainant," the return unsatisfied of an execution issued to another county is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction.⁶⁴

(2) Sufficiency of Return

To support a creditors' suit, the return of the execution must be properly made; it must be made in good faith, by the proper officer, to the proper court and within the proper time.

As a condition precedent to the maintenance of a creditors' suit, a proper return of the execution must be made.⁶⁵ The return must show prima facie that the creditor has exhausted his legal remedies.⁶⁶ The return must be broad enough to disclose or show that defendant has no property of any kind, real or personal, out of which the execution can be satisfied,⁶⁷ and must be such as, if untrue, would render the officer liable for a false return.⁶⁸

A personal demand on defendant in the execution for payment thereof, or of property out of which to make it, is not essential to the validity of the return.⁶⁹ A return of an execution against several defendants stating generally that they had no property out of which the execution could be collected, without particularly stating that neither of them had such property, is sufficient to show that the execution could not be made out of joint or separate property of defendants.⁷⁰

Good faith. The object of requiring the issuance and return unsatisfied of an execution being to show that complainant has no remedy at law, the return of the execution unsatisfied must be made in good faith and because defendant has no property out of which to make it, and a return for any other reason is not sufficient.⁷¹ The return of an execution unsatisfied is insufficient where made pursuant to the direction of plaintiff in the execution,⁷² without any effort made by the officer to collect the execution or find property on which to levy it.⁷³ On the other hand, the creditors' right to maintain the bill is not affected by the fact that there was property which might have been seized, unless plaintiff knew of its existence and omitted to act on such knowledge.⁷⁴ Furthermore, it has been held that the fact that plaintiff in the execution did not direct the sheriff to levy on certain property belonging to defendant, of

However, where there were two executions issued, one to the county of defendant's residence and the other to another county, it was held that a creditors' bill could not be maintained except on an allegation of the return of both executions unsatisfied, unless it was also alleged that some fraudulent obstruction to the collection of the second execution was interposed, or that the property of defendant in such county would in any event be insufficient to pay the judgment.—Willis v. In Ohio, under Code § 458, providing that any equitable interest of a judgment debtor shall be subject to the payment of the judgment "when a judgment debtor has not personal or real property subject to levy on execution," the court must dismiss the bill whenever it is shown or admitted by plaintiff that the debtor has sufficient property liable to execution to satisfy the judgment.—Lee v. Harback, 2 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 361, 2 West.L.Month. 527.

which plaintiff knew, is no defense to a bill;⁷⁵ but there is authority to the contrary.⁷⁶

By whom made. A return of nulla bona made by a deputy sheriff is sufficient, where it does not appear that his authority is not coextensive with the territorial boundaries of the county.⁷⁷

To what court. Where a judgment is docketed in another county, a creditors' bill may not be sustained on return of the execution to the clerk's office of that county, where the statute requires that it be duly returned to the court from which it issued.⁷⁸

Time for return. As may be seen in subdivision c (1) of this section, the execution must be returned unsatisfied in whole or in part prior to the filing of the bill. A return of the execution on the return day named therein is a good one;⁷⁹ but a return may not be made after one of several joint judgment defendants has paid the judgment and it has been assigned to him.⁸⁰

As a general rule, a creditor may base his suit on a return made before the return day, or before the lapse of the entire time within which by statute the sheriff may hold the execution in his hands, where the bill is not filed until after that time, and where the sheriff takes on himself the responsibility of returning the execution within such time, having satisfied himself that defendant has no property out of which to make the money.⁸¹ This rule does not prevail in all states, however;⁸² and it has been held that the creditor may not file his bill before the return day named in the execution, even where the execution has been actually returned before that day,⁸³ although there is authority to the contrary.⁸⁴

(3) Operation and Effect

In a creditors' suit the return of an execution unsatisfied is prima facie, sufficient and ordinarily conclusive evidence that defendant is without property subject to execution.

The return by the officer of an execution nulla bona is prima facie and sufficient evidence that defendant has no property subject to levy at that time, so as to authorize a creditors' bill based on the judgment on which the execution issued,⁸⁵ especially where the answer admits that such is the effect of the return,⁸⁶ and dispenses with proof that the debtor is without property other than that which the creditor seeks to reach by his bill.⁸⁷

Ordinarily, such a return is conclusive evidence of the exhaustion of legal remedies and the necessity for resort to a court of equity, when it is good on its face and is not made collusively,⁸⁸ and, as is shown in § 51 infra, such a return ordinarily may not be attacked collaterally.

§ 48. Supplementary Proceedings

A creditor need not first resort to supplementary proceedings in order to file a creditors' bill where such proceedings merely provide a cumulative remedy.

Where statutory proceedings supplementary to execution are regarded as cumulative only, see §

5 supra, a creditors' bill may be maintained without first resorting to the statutory proceeding.⁸⁹

In some jurisdictions, the creditor must first resort to supplementary proceedings,⁹⁰ unless such proceedings will not afford an adequate remedy.⁹¹

§ 49. Resort to Collateral Security

The authorities are in conflict on the question as to whether a creditor must resort to collateral security as a condition precedent to filing a creditors' bill.

In some jurisdictions, it has been held that a creditor may maintain a bill in equity without first pursuing his remedies under a mortgage by which his debt is secured;⁹² but it has been also held that where a creditor has security for his debt, he must first exhaust such security in order to obtain relief in equity.⁹³

§ 50. Exhausting Legal Remedies after Suit Brought

As is shown in § 67 infra, where jurisdiction does not exist at the time of the filing of a creditors' bill because of the want of judgment or execution, the defect cannot be cured by the subsequent recovery of a judgment or the issuance and return unsatisfied of execution thereon and the setting up of such facts in a supplemental bill.

It may be observed in § 43 b (2) supra, however, that by reason of statute in some jurisdictions a pending action at law is sufficient to maintain a creditors' bill, although no final decree in equity may be rendered until judgment at law has been entered.

§ 51. Defenses

Ordinarily, in the absence of waiver, anything tending to defeat the suit may be shown in defense to creditors' suits, but the judgment or return of execution is not open to contradiction or impeachment.

Ordinarily, anything tending to defeat the suit may be shown in defense to creditors' suits.⁹⁴ However, in an action against a person alleged to have property of the judgment debtor or to be indebted to him, alleged facts will not constitute a defense where they would not have been a defense in an action by the judgment debtor.⁹⁵

A judgment rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, unless reversed or annulled in some direct proceeding, is not open to contradiction or impeachment in respect of its validity, verity, or binding effect in a creditors' suit based thereon.⁹⁶ Ordinarily, the fact that the execution was not issued and returned in conformity with statutory requirements cannot be taken advantage of in proceedings on a creditors' bill founded on such execution,⁹⁷ and the return of execution, as regards its conclusiveness, is governed by the same rule as the execution, and is presumed to be regular; objections thereto should be made to the court in which the judgment was recovered.⁹⁸ However, the fact that the judgment, on which the creditors' suit is based, is void is a good defense to such suit.⁹⁹

Where a bank which is a party to a creditors' bill against a depositor pays the deposit to him, it is subrogated to his rights and may avail itself of any defense existing in his behalf.¹

Waiver. A defense to creditors' suits may be waived, as by not setting it up in the answer.²

§ 52. Limitations and Laches

A creditors' suit may be barred by limitations or laches, the time beginning to run ordinarily from the return of execution nulla bona.

A creditors' suit must be brought within the time allowed by the statute of limitations.³ Ordinarily, until judgment has been obtained at law and execution has been returned nulla bona, the right to file a creditors' bill does not accrue, and hence the statute of limitations begins to run only from that time.⁴ Although there is authority to the contrary,⁵ the general rule is that where the suit is in reality for the benefit of all persons interested provided they come in and make themselves parties, the statute of limitations applies to the time of the institution of the suit and not to the time of intervention.⁶ However, where a bill filed on behalf of an individual creditor is afterward amended to state that it is filed on behalf of all creditors who may come in, a creditor whose claim is barred at the time of the amendment cannot come in under the bill.⁷

The defense of the statute of limitations may be set up by any party to the proceeding;⁸ and it has been held that the statute may be set up at any time before the master makes his report, and even thereafter on exceptions, unless the party has done some act or stands by and permits some act to be done which necessarily implies a waiver of that defense on his part.⁹

Laches. Where plaintiff is guilty of laches he will be precluded from maintaining a creditors' suit.¹⁰

§ 53. Jurisdiction and Venue

- a. Jurisdiction
- b. Venue

a. Jurisdiction

Creditors' suits should ordinarily be brought in equity and the amount involved must be within the jurisdictional amounts that may be fixed by statutory or constitutional provisions.

A creditors' suit being one of equitable cognizance, as shown supra § 1, it follows that, in the absence of any statute to the contrary, the bill should be filed in a court of equity jurisdiction.¹¹ A court is not deprived of jurisdiction because the creditor originally filing the bill was not entitled to relief where it had acquired jurisdiction of valid claims by intervention of other creditors.¹²

Where a judgment is obtained in a federal court, such court will entertain a creditors' bill brought by the judgment debtor.¹³

Jurisdictional amount. By constitutional or statutory provisions, the jurisdiction of the lower federal courts and of particular lower courts of some of the states is dependent on the amount in controversy, and where a minimum amount is thus fixed, the court cannot entertain a creditors' bill involving a less amount;¹⁴ and where a maximum amount is fixed, the court has no jurisdiction of a bill involving a greater amount.¹⁵ It has been held that, if either the amount of complainant's judgment or the amount of defendant's property is insufficient, the bill will not be sustained.¹⁶ Two or more creditors who have obtained judgments on which executions have been returned nulla bona may join in a creditors' suit for the purpose of giving the court jurisdiction, where the aggregate of their debts exceeds the minimum jurisdictional amount, although their individual claims are less than such amount,¹⁷ and in a federal court it has been held sufficient if the judgment of one of the plaintiffs exceeds the jurisdictional minimum, and other creditors having claims of the same general character, although insufficient in amount, may unite or intervene.¹⁸

In some states, however, the courts have jurisdiction regardless of the amount of complainant's demand,¹⁹ although it has been held that the court will not entertain jurisdiction where the amount of complainant's claim is trifling;²⁰ or where the value of the property sought to be reached does not exceed the amount of lien debts, and an injunction would be fruitless.²¹

b. Venue

A creditors' suit must be brought within the forum prescribed by applicable constitutional or statutory provisions.

A creditors' suit must be brought within the forum prescribed by applicable constitutional or statutory provisions.²² While, under some statutes, the assignee of a judgment may file a bill in the county in which he resides,²³ under other statutes a creditors' suit may be maintained either in the county in which the judgment was rendered or in the county in which defendant resides or is summoned.²⁴

It has been held that, in the absence of statute prescribing the county in which equitable proceedings shall be commenced, a creditors' suit should be filed in the county where one of the creditors resides, if both reside within the state; but that if plaintiff does not reside within the state, the bill may be brought in any county.²⁵ It has been held also that the courts of a particular county have jurisdiction where one of the defendants resides therein,²⁶ or where the property sought to be subjected is situated there.²⁷ It has been held in the federal courts that a creditors' bill may be filed by an alien plaintiff in the district of the situs of the property, although defendants may be residents of another district.²⁸

§ 54. Parties in General

All persons whose rights may be affected by the decree to be made in a creditors' suit should be made parties.

Although all persons whose rights may be affected by the decree to be made in a creditors' suit are necessary parties,²⁹ the action of the court in proceeding without such parties is erroneous, but not void.³⁰ The court may, if necessary to a proper decision, require lienholders to be made formal parties, although their debts have been reported as liens by the commissioner.³¹ Although a judgment at law is recovered in the name of one to the use of another, yet a creditors' bill cannot be brought by the use plaintiff in the same way, but the person to whose use the bill is filed must be made a party to the suit.³²

§ 55. Plaintiffs in General

A creditor of a living debtor may file a bill in behalf of himself alone where he does not seek enforcement of any trust for the benefit of creditors; and several creditors having distinct claims may join in a creditors' bill.

In general, where the creditor of a living debtor resorts to equity because of the inadequacy of his remedy at law, as in suits to subject property not reachable by execution, and not for the enforcement of any trust for the benefit of creditors, he may file the bill in behalf of himself alone.³³

although the usual and the better practice in such cases is for plaintiff to sue on behalf of himself and other creditors of the same class, as shown infra § 56. A bill by a single creditor, although filed on behalf of himself only, may, by an order convening all the creditors and directing the statement of proper accounts, be converted into a creditors' suit, and it will be regarded as such from the time such order of reference is made,³⁴ provided the court had jurisdiction of the single creditor's suit.³⁵

Joinder of plaintiffs. It is well settled that creditors of the same debtor, each of whom is entitled to resort to equity, although their claims are several and distinct, may join in a creditors' bill,³⁶ provided all creditors so joining stand on the same footing and have judgment and execution returned unsatisfied, where that is a prerequisite.³⁷

It has been held that both assignor and assignee of a claim or judgment are proper³⁸ and necessary³⁹ parties to a creditors' bill; but in some states the assignor need not ordinarily be made a party.⁴⁰

§ 56. — Suing in Behalf of All

One or more creditors may file a bill in behalf of all creditors who may choose to come in, and it has been held that a creditor cannot, for his sole benefit, exercise rights which exist for the equal benefit of all creditors as a class.

One creditor may file a bill in behalf of himself and all other creditors in the same situation who may choose to come in and contribute to the expense of the suit,⁴¹ where the beneficiaries are so numerous that it would be impracticable to bring them all before the court,⁴² provided the suit is in its nature one for the benefit of all the creditors,⁴³ for otherwise the other creditors are not entitled to share.⁴⁴ So, two or more creditors may unite in suing for the benefit of themselves and all other creditors.⁴⁵

It has been held that a suit to subject lands to payment of a judgment should be brought on behalf of complainant and all other judgment creditors, except those made defendants,⁴⁶ and that one creditor cannot, for his sole benefit, exercise rights which exist for the equal benefit of all creditors as a class.⁴⁷

Under some statutes, one or more creditors representing one third in amount of the unsecured debts of an insolvent are necessary parties to a suit instituted under the statute; and where an ordinary bill is filed by parties representing less than one third of the debts in amount, the defect cannot be cured by admitting new parties.⁴⁸

§ 57. Defendants

- a. In general
- b. Judgment debtors
- c. Debtor of judgment debtor
- d. Judgment creditors and other lienors
- e. Trustees and cestuis que trust

a. In General

All persons interested in the subject matter of the suit who are not plaintiffs are proper and necessary parties defendant.

As in other suits, the rule is that all persons interested in the subject matter of the suit who are not plaintiffs are proper and necessary parties defendant.⁴⁹ Conversely, persons not interested need not be made parties.⁵⁰

Naming a person in the caption of the bill as a defendant and serving him with process are not alone sufficient to constitute such person a party to the suit so as to authorize the granting of relief against him. An averment showing his interest in, and relation to, the subject matter of the suit and a prayer for relief against him are indispensable, and the fact that such person files a so-called answer to the bill, claiming title to some of the property in suit, does not supply the lack of such averment or make such person a party.⁵¹ So, where the debtor is made sole defendant, and he files an answer showing that a third person holds a prior deed of trust of the premises, and the court orders such person to be made a party defendant, and that process be issued and served on him, which is done, such person is not thereby made a party defendant so as to authorize a decree against him, there being no allegations with reference to him in the bill, and no relief being prayed against him;⁵² nor is such person made a party defendant by the fact that the court, for the purpose of ascertaining all liens and their priorities, orders a reference of which such person is notified, since a decree directing all liens to be audited cannot make a trustee who holds the legal title a quasi party, nor the cestui que trust in a deed of trust, but only the undefined class of judgment creditors holding liens similar to complainant's.⁵³

Persons in possession of debtor's property. Ordinarily, all persons in possession of the property of the debtor sought to be reached are necessary parties to the suit.⁵⁴ However, a clerk of the court in possession of a fund is neither a necessary nor proper party.⁵⁵

erty. Persons jointly interested with the debtor in property sought to be reached by a creditors' bill are not necessary parties, if the bill does not seek to affect their interests.⁵⁶ So, the persons entitled to the reversion after the determination of an estate by the curtesy are not proper parties defendant in a suit to subject such estate to a judgment against the tenant.⁵⁷ Where, however, the answer shows that persons not before the court claim property in the debtor's possession which the creditor attempts to reach, such persons or their representatives must be made parties before a decree can be had.⁵⁸

Grantors; assignees and grantees. Persons who have parted with their title to the property involved in a creditors' bill are not necessary parties therein.⁵⁹

Save in exceptional cases,⁶⁰ assignees, transferees, or grantees of the property sought to be reached are proper and necessary parties to the bill.⁶¹ However, where there have been successive assignments, the intermediate assignees are not necessary parties, if no attack is made on the first assignment and no relief is sought against the intermediate assignees.⁶²

Receiver or assignee. The court may grant leave to make a receiver a party defendant on a proper showing,⁶³ and where, pending a creditors' bill, bankruptcy proceedings are instituted against the debtor, and he makes a transfer of his property to an assignee, the assignee should be brought in.⁶⁴

Minors and guardians. On a creditors' bill to reach a trust fund in which minors are interested, guardians ad litem may be appointed and are proper parties defendant.⁶⁵ Minor heirs have been held necessary parties to a suit to sell property to satisfy the judgment,⁶⁶ and it has been held that a suit to subject to the payment of debts of the insured the proceeds of life policies assigned by him to his wife and children cannot be brought against the curator of the minors, but must be brought against them directly, the title to an infant's estate being in the infant and not in the curator.⁶⁷

b. Judgment Debtors

Ordinarily, the judgment debtor is a necessary party defendant in an action to subject his equitable interests to the payment of a judgment.

Subject to some exceptions and qualifications,⁶⁸ it is a general rule that the judgment debtor is a necessary party defendant in an action to subject his equitable interests to the payment of a judgment,⁶⁹ even though he is a nonresident.⁷⁰ So, where there are several judgment debtors, all of them are necessary parties defendant,⁷¹ unless it

Waiver of right to sue one of several

Although a creditor having remedies against several persons, each equally responsible to him, may proceed to enforce payment of his debt from either, and is not bound to proceed against all, yet he waives this right by convening all before the court and asking that the persons and subject of right chargeable with the debt shall be compelled to pay it.—Bentley v. Where the judgment debtor made no claim to the fund sought to be reached, it was held that he was not a necessary party.—Rogers v. Brix Bros. Logging Co., C.C.A.Or., 287 F. 867.

Contribution from distributees

Where a judgment creditor of an insolvent, who was not a party to the insolvency proceedings, files a bill for contribution against a distributee who has received more than his equitable share of the assets, he need not make the insolvent, nor other creditors parties.—Bickford v. Joint judgments

Where in judgment creditors' suits, consolidated or ordered to be heard together, there are joint judgments against judgment debtor and third persons, such third persons should be made parties defendant and served with process, and until that is done, is shown by the bill that the persons not made parties are mere sureties,⁷² or are not legally or morally liable to contribute toward the satisfaction of the debt;⁷³ or are insolvent⁷⁴ or are out of the jurisdiction of the court.⁷⁵

Where a creditor seeks payment out of a chose in action, the person against whom the debtor has a cause of action is a proper, and sometimes a necessary, party.

Where the creditor seeks payment out of a chose in action, the person against whom the debtor has a cause of action is a proper party defendant,⁷⁶ and two or more distinct debtors of the judgment debtor may be joined.⁷⁷ In some cases, it is held that such person is a necessary party defendant,⁷⁸ but this has been disputed.⁷⁹

The state; municipal corporations. Where the state is a subscriber to stock of a debtor corporation, it should not be made a party to a creditors' bill, it being sufficient to allege inability to make it a party.⁸⁰ It has been held that a municipal corporation which is indebted to a judgment debtor may be made a party defendant.⁸¹ In any event where a bill seeks discovery of salary due a county officer and what disposition, if any, he has made of it, and an injunction against his transferring the same, etc., and does not ask any relief against the county, neither the county nor any of its officers is a necessary party.⁸²

d. Judgment Creditors and Other Lienors

Ordinarily, all persons having liens on the land sought to be subjected should be made parties.

All creditors whose judgments are liens on the land sought to be subjected should, according to some of the authorities, be made parties defendant;⁸³ but this rule does not prevail in all jurisdictions.⁸⁴ According to some cases, all persons having specific liens must be joined;⁸⁵ but it has been held that a mortgagee is not a necessary party to a suit to subject the equity of redemption to a judgment against the mortgagor,⁸⁶ although the better practice is to make him a party.⁸⁷

e. Trustees and Cestuis Que Trust

Generally, where the legal title to the property is held by trustees, such trustees and the cestuis que trust are necessary parties in creditors' suits relating to the property.

In creditors' bills brought to subject equitable interests of debtors to the satisfaction of their debts, where the legal title to the property is held by trustees, such trustees are, as a rule, necessary parties defendant;⁸⁸ but the rule is otherwise under some statutes.⁸⁹ So, all cestuis que trust whose interests are sought to be affected are necessary parties defendant,⁹⁰ particularly if they are limited in number.⁹¹

Government as party

A suit cannot be maintained by a creditor of a railroad to reach moneys due it from the government, where the government is not made a party, as the fact that it cannot be sued except by its consent does not give the court jurisdiction to adjudicate its rights when it is not a party.

Suing individual as officer

Where it appears from the averments of a creditor's bill that the money claimed to be due to defendant is payable to defendant as treasurer of the town and not as an individual, and that all matters which will be legally required to be done or which he will be restrained from doing by the direction of the court in order to carry out the purposes of the bill are matters which defendant would have to do or refrain from doing as treasurer of the fund, it is essential, to give the court jurisdiction to adjudicate the right claimed under the bill, to make the treasurer a party to the proceeding, and this legal requisite is not supplied by

§ 58. Intervention and Change of Parties

Generally, all persons possessing the necessary interest may intervene in creditors' suits. The petition in intervention need not conform to technical rules applicable to pleadings between the principal parties.

As a general rule, all persons possessing the necessary interest may intervene in creditors' suits.⁹² Thus, unless intervention is not necessary to protect their rights,⁹³ other creditors may, by leave of court, intervene as parties plaintiff whether the bill is filed on behalf of plaintiff and of all other creditors who may join as parties or on behalf of plaintiff alone,⁹⁴ although their judgments were obtained after the creditors' bill was filed;⁹⁵ but where there are several creditors' bills which have not been consolidated, complainants in one cannot, on motion, be permitted to intervene in the others to assail the decree.⁹⁶ Where funds of a debtor are in the hands of a court of equity, a judgment creditor may file an intervening petition to have such funds applied to his judgment,⁹⁷ and is not bound to resort to independent proceedings in equity unless he so chooses.⁹⁸ It has been held that where it has been established by one of the parties to a creditors' bill by a judgment and return nulla bona of execution that the debtor is insolvent, and that hence there is no adequate remedy at law, then all creditors, whether having judgments or not, should be allowed to come in by intervening petition;⁹⁹ but in other cases it is held that creditors who have not exhausted their legal remedies cannot intervene,¹ even though the bill is filed on behalf of all creditors.² A creditor who has no lien and does not offer to share costs and expenses may not be entitled to intervene.³ It has been held that if the suit is not a creditors' bill nor maintainable as such, intervention will not be allowed;⁴ but it has also been held that where a bill is filed by a creditor whose claim has not been reduced to judgment, a judgment creditor who has had an execution returned nulla bona may intervene as plaintiff.⁵

A judgment in a state court is a sufficient basis for an intervention in a general creditors' suit in a federal court, although an appeal is pending from it.⁶

Time for coming in. It is usual to permit creditors to come in as parties at any time before dis-

92. Debtor's attorneys in another suit

In suit to reach and apply moneys due defendant, amount of which was in litigation in suit by defendant against others, defendant's attorneys in such other suit were properly permitted to intervene.—Baskin v. Pass, Mass., 19 N.E.2d 30.

Purchaser pendente lite

A purchaser from defendant pending a suit to subject the property to the payment of the vendor's debts is not entitled to be made a party to the suit.—Child, Pratt & Co. v. Burton, 69 Ky. 617, 6 Bush, 617.

Discretion of court

An application by a stranger to a suit to be allowed to intervene and be made defendant, in order that he may litigate plaintiff's claim, and set up a claim against the original defendants adverse to, and exclusive of, that of plaintiff, is not a matter of strict right, but rests in the discretion of the court.—Scheidt v. Sturgis, 23 N.Y.Super. 606.

93. Presenting claims to master

In a creditors' suit in which a receiver has been appointed, notice given to all creditors to present their claims to a special master with authority to take testimony and to determine all claims to priority, subject to action of the court, leave to intervene as a party will not be granted to a creditor, whose rights, as alleged in his petition, are fully provided for and protected by such general orders.—Acme White Lead & Color Works v. Republic Motor Truck Co., D.C.Mich., 285 F. 88.

Demurrers erroneously sustained

In creditor's suit to set aside deeds and for an accounting as to proceeds of realty deeded, sustaining demurrers of security-deed interveners to answers of plaintiff judgment creditor attacking priority of interventions, on ground that sales under which interveners claimed were invalid because of lack of reconveyance to grantor debtor, was error where interventions recited the obtaining of judgments and executions and the crediting on such judgments of the proceeds of sale of real estate covered by security deeds, but did not aver as to manner of sale.—Williams Realty & Loan Co. v. Employment of own counsel

One creditor, who came into a creditors' suit to subject lands to various judgments, but refused to contribute to the compensation of counsel employed by the other creditors, could nevertheless prove its judgment, where it appeared by its own counsel, and was liable for costs.—McClanahan's Adm'r v. tribution of the fund,⁷ or before final decree.⁸ Under some special circumstances, new parties may come in after decree if they can show an interest in the fund;⁹ but the filing of petitions to intervene will not be allowed from time to time without limit so as unnecessarily to delay plaintiff's cause.¹⁰ A creditor cannot ordinarily come in at a subsequent term, after decree settling all controverted questions, for the purpose of reopening the case and having the questions reheard.¹¹ After the original suit has been dismissed, although the formal order of dismissal has not been entered, other creditors have no right to intervene, although they contend that the dismissal was fraudulent as to them.¹²

Pleading and practice. Although a person not named in the bill as a party may become such in a general sense when a decree for a general account is entered under which he may prove his demand, as shown infra §§ 77, 78, when a creditor desires to be admitted as a cocomplainant of record, the course is to present a petition to the court, setting forth his claim,¹³ and to serve process or notice on the other parties,¹⁴ but the petition for intervention must not state a distinct cause of action.¹⁵ It has been held, however, that intervening petitions are not required to conform to the technical rules applicable to pleadings between the principal parties, and need not name other parties nor contain prayer for process.¹⁶ A petition to intervene may be filed without previous order of the court, and when so filed becomes a part of the pleadings and record;¹⁷ but the mere filing of a petition by another creditor to be made a party does not make petitioner a party, to effect such result an order of the court is necessary;¹⁸ and no defense which may exist against the claim of a creditor who is permitted to come in as a party to the record is concluded by the order admitting him.¹⁹ Where a creditor is already a party plaintiff at his election to come in and comply with prescribed conditions, the fact that the order recognizing him as such is made before the personal representatives of certain deceased defendants have been brought in by service of process constitutes no irregularity.²⁰

In a suit by a simple creditor to subject funds in the hands of a third person, a bill of interpleader may be sustained as a general creditors' bill in order to remove any question of the court's jurisdiction over the entire amount of the funds in controversy.²¹ After judgment appointing a receiver, it has been held error to permit a person to be made a party defendant with leave to answer, where he does not allege that he has any defense, nor submit a proposed answer or affidavit of merits, but merely alleges that he is a creditor of defendant, holding a note.²² Where interveners have presented a petition for the discharge of the receiver and for an accounting by him, a denial of it is not a bar to a second petition in intervention to declare execution sales illegal and void because made when the property was in the receiver's possession and control.²³

Status of interveners. Where the receiver of the defendant debtor intervenes, claiming the fund in suit, he stands in the position of plaintiff in an ordinary action and must be dealt with as such,²⁴ and if a bill is filed by a creditor whose claim has it been reduced to judgment, and a judgment creditor who has had an execution returned nulla bona intervenes, the intervener becomes plaintiff and all other parties defendants.²⁵ While an intervening creditor cannot defeat the judgment claim in which the bill is founded and the court obtains jurisdiction, he is not concluded by collateral averments in the bill which concede the validity of certain bonds and mortgages affecting the property, and he is, therefore, free to attack the validity thereof.²⁶

If persons who, although not necessary, are proper parties, are permitted to file answers without objection, plaintiffs cannot afterward object to their being parties,²⁷ and where a creditor who has been made a defendant to a general bill intervenes as a complainant, and the original complainants not only do not object but accept his assistance in the prosecution of the suit, they cannot thereafter attack his status as a complainant.²⁸

§ 59. — Rights of Plaintiffs and of Interveners to Control Suit

Prior to an order of reference or decree, the complainant may ordinarily discontinue a creditors' suit where other creditors have not become parties.

Although unsecured creditors intervening in the suit, being neither necessary nor proper parties, cannot contest the right of litigants to proceed,²⁹ where the original complainant unduly delays the prosecution, the conduct of the cause may be committed by the court to some other creditor.³⁰

In the absence of statute to the contrary,³¹ a creditor who commences suit for himself and all other creditors who may join may discontinue the same without the consent of the other creditors before any decree is made, where they have not become parties,³² even though they have filed petitions to intervene.³³ However, one complainant can dismiss only as to himself, where there are other complainants, or where intervening creditors have been admitted as parties to the record,³⁴ and after an order of reference³⁵ or a decree,³⁶ complainant cannot deprive the other creditors of the same class of the right to prosecute the suit. So, where a judgment creditor, after return of "No property found," brings action to subject land in the county where the judgment was rendered, as authorized by statute, and another creditor files an answer and cross petition, plaintiff's action having been properly brought in such county, his act in dismissing it cannot deprive cross complainant of his right to prosecute the action in that form, although he might not have been entitled to sue there.³⁷

In regard to discontinuance or dismissal after complainant's judgment has been satisfied by defendant, the cases are not in accord. It has been held, on the one hand, that such satisfaction leaves nothing in court on which there can be any litigation, and that defendant is entitled to a dismissal,³⁸ although after notice by him of an application for dismissal other creditors who have acquired judgments since the filing of the bill have, on their ex parte petitions, been admitted as parties complainant.³⁹ On the other hand, it has been held that satisfaction of complainant's judgment after an order of reference does not suspend the suit,⁴⁰ but that it may proceed in the name of complainant unless another creditor is substituted in his place;⁴¹ that in such case complainant may have the cause dismissed as to himself, but not as to other creditors who are parties, formal or informal, to the suit;⁴² and that satisfaction of his claim does not entitle complainant to discontinue the suit where intervening creditors have acquired rights which would be thereby jeopardized or deferred.⁴³

§ 61. Discovery

- a. In general
- b. Bill
- c. Demurrer or answer
- d. Decree and enforcement

a. In General

Ordinarily, discovery may be had in aid of a creditors' bill and every one from whom discovery is sought should be made a party.

While the rule does not prevail in all jurisdictions,⁴⁴ yet in most states, by statute or otherwise, in addition to equitable relief by application of property not otherwise available to the payment of claims of creditors, the bill may be filed for discovery of the debtor's property by compelling him and others to disclose, by answers under oath to interrogatories, any and all property or effects of the debtor, together with his evidence of title, the situation of the property, and the disposition, if any, which he has made of it;⁴⁵ and discovery may be had as well of property without the jurisdiction of the court as of that within the jurisdiction.⁴⁶ However, complainants can have discovery only of what is necessary for their own use, and they will not be allowed to pry into the business of defendant.⁴⁷

Statutes removing the disability of parties to testify, whatever may be their effect on the right to maintain bills for discovery generally, do not take away the right of discovery incidental to a creditors' bill, where such right is expressly conferred by statute.⁴⁸

Parties. Persons named in the bill as having possession of the debtor's property, kept concealed and unknown to complainant, are proper parties defendant,⁴⁹ and every one from whom discovery is sought should be made a party;⁵⁰ and any one from whom information is sought may be made a party for the purpose of discovery only.⁵¹ Under statutes authorizing the creditor to file a bill against the debtor and any other person, it has been held that the bill may be filed against the debtor alone;⁵² but the cases are not in accord as to whether this may be done in the absence of statute.⁵³

Under one statute defendant was held not entitled to have the bill dismissed because not brought in the name of the parties who it alleges are the owners of the judgments.⁵⁴

b. Bill

It is ordinarily sufficient for a bill to allege the supposed interest of defendant in the property in general terms.

It has been held that in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, the allegations of the bill must be specific and precise with respect to the estate or interest sought to be subjected, and must not be speculative or vague;⁵⁵ but the bill is not always construed so strictly,⁵⁶ as where discovery is sought in aid of another and primary equity.⁵⁷ However, under statutes authorizing the discovery of any property, money, or thing in action belonging to defendant, and of any property, money, or thing in action due to him, or held in trust for him, it is enough to allege the supposed interest of defendant in the property, etc., in the general terms of the statute;⁵⁸ and it is not necessary to allege fraud on the part of the debtor, or concealment by him of his property or effects with the intention to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors.⁵⁹ A bill for discovery filed by a creditor at large should allege that the debtor has no property reachable by the ordinary process of execution sufficient to satisfy complainant's demand.⁶⁰ In a bill for discovery of assets, a waiver of answer under oath as to all except interrogatories directed to the character and location of the assets alleged to be concealed does not prevent the bill from being a bill of discovery.⁶¹ An interrogatory in a bill for discovery as to the amount of income received by an execution proof debtor as a public official, and as to the disposition thereof, is not impertinent nor improper if designed to disclose possible investments.⁶² Objection to entertaining a bill filed for discovery as a creditors' bill is not too late, although made after the report of the master, if the intention to treat it as a creditors' bill was not disclosed till after the answer and the taking of the testimony.⁶³

A bill seeking to discover legal assets belonging to defendant must be verified;⁶⁴ but when discovery is sought as merely incident to relief in matters of ordinary equitable cognizance, the bill need not be sworn to.⁶⁵

The necessity of a supplemental bill to reach after-acquired property is discussed infra § 67.

c. Demurrer or Answer

A general demurrer to a bill for discovery will not be sustained where the creditor is entitled to any of the discovery claimed. The answer to the bill must be a full and true statement, responsive to the interrogatories, of all the estate of the debtor.

On a bill for discovery and relief defendant may answer and make the discoveries sought, and demur to the relief only.⁶⁶

Demurrer. Where the creditor is entitled to any of the discovery prayed for, a general demurrer to the bill should not be sustained.⁶⁷ While interrogatories appended to the bill are incorporated in and become a part thereof, yet they do not constitute, separate from the stating part of the bill, the subject of demurrer.⁶⁸ A bill for discovery is not demurrable as requiring defendant to disclose matters which may subject him to a criminal prosecution or pains and penalties where such facts are not alleged or suggested in the bill;⁶⁹ and a demurrer for want of parties will not be sustained when the bill seeks discovery of persons interested.⁷⁰

Answer. A general denial is not sufficient, but there must be a full and true statement, responsive to the interrogatories, of all the estate of the debtor, real and personal, of every description, including goods, chattels, choses in action, etc., as of the time of filing the bill,⁷¹ and when the answers are not sufficient, complainants may except and compel full answers,⁷² although, under some statutes, complainant must look for discovery before a master and is not entitled to discovery by answer.⁷³ It is not proper to except to defendant's answer because of his failure to produce books and papers, but the application to have any such documents as defendant admits to be in his possession or under his control brought in must be made by petition.⁷⁴ Where discovery is prayed in respect

Particular ground

The objection that a creditors' bill, seeking to subject to the judgment land in which the judgment debtor is alleged to have an interest, and seeking a discovery as to the persons claiming to own the land, is defective in that it fails to allege that defendant can make such discovery, is not raised by a general demurrer on the ground that such persons were not made parties.—Burke v. Morris, 25 So. 759, 121 Ala. 126.

Claim property exempt
Where defendant denies that he has property, except such as he claims is exempt from seizure for the payment of his debts, the answer must show the amount and value of such property.—Gregory v. Valentine, 4 Edw. N.Y., 282.—Brown v. Morgan, 3 Edw. N.Y., 278.

Subjecting to forfeitures and penalties Defendant need not make an answer which would incriminate him or subject him to forfeitures or penalties.—Bay State Iron Co. v. Goodall, 39 N.H. 223, 75 Am.D. 219.

Surplus in trustee's hands

Where the bill distinctly alleges that a surplus exists in the hands of a trustee over what is necessary for defendant's support, a denial should set forth facts and figures as to the amount necessary for support.—Miller v. Miller, 1 Abb.N.Cas. N.Y., 80.

More formal averments, such as an averment required by rule of court that plaintiff believes that defendant has equitable interests, etc., of the value of one hundred dollars, need not be answered at all, and a mere formal denial is sufficient.—Batterson v. Ferguson, 1 Barb. N.Y., 490.

of the indebtedness of defendant to the judgment debtor, he cannot object to making such discovery because answer under oath is waived.⁷⁵

Where the answers are responsive to the charges contained in the bill, they must be taken to be true,⁷⁶ unless they are proved to be false;⁷⁷ but averments in the answer which are not responsive to any charge in the bill, and which set up matters as to which no discovery is sought, are not to be taken as true.⁷⁸ By setting down the cause for hearing on the bill and answer, complainant is taken to admit the truth of the whole of defendant's answer, not only of the facts stated in direct response to the bill, but also those set up by way of affirmative defense.⁷⁹ However, under some statutes, answers are not usually sustained by the respondent's affidavit, and are not regarded as evidence, whether they are sworn to or not.⁸⁰

The refusal of defendant to answer interrogatories contained in the bill is not to be taken as an admission of the allegations of the bill which have not been answered, however much it may arouse suspicion against him.⁸¹

d. Decree and Enforcement

Full satisfaction of their claims is all the relief complaining creditors are entitled to under a bill of discovery.

Full satisfaction of their claims is all the relief complaining creditors are entitled to under a bill of discovery, and, therefore, a decree is improper

which directs the debtor to pay over to a receiver a sum in excess of the aggregate sum asked for by complainants.⁸² In some jurisdictions, in an action to subject property of a defendant to the satisfaction of a judgment against him, in which action persons holding property in which the debtor has any interest may be made defendants, the remedy to compel such answers as the court may direct is to require full discoveries by process of contempt.⁸³ The right to compel disclosure on special motion in case of a failure by defendant to answer all interrogatories is addressed to the discretionary power of the court.⁸⁴ In proceedings in chancery in aid of an unsatisfied judgment and execution, an interlocutory order for discovery should specify the place for defendant's appearance.⁸⁵

§ 62. Injunction

- a. In general
- b. Notice; operation and effect of injunction
- c. Violation of injunction
- d. Dissolution of injunction

a. In General

Injunction is frequently issued as a matter of course in aid of creditors' suits.

An injunction may properly be granted in aid of a creditors' bill,⁸⁶ provided complainant has exhausted his remedies at law,⁸⁷ and the particular facts of the case warrant its issuance.⁸⁸ Thus,

Raising amount of bond

In creditors' suit wherein court restrained further proceedings as to foreclosure of other mortgages executed by debtor, and fixed amount of injunction bond at a set sum, with permission to any party to apply for modification of amount, court subsequently had right to increase amount of bond as against contention that remedy should have been by appeal.—First Carolinas Joint Stock Land Bank of Columbia v. Creditor without lien

A suit on petition, alleging plaintiff's rental of land for one third of products, claiming an equitable lien on corn raised, with damages from defendant's breach of rent contract, and seeking to enjoin his disposal of corn, is within general rule under a statute, that creditors without a lien cannot enjoin their debtors from disposing of their property, and an interlocutory injunction and the appointment of a receiver was error.—Ayers v. Claridy, 101 S.E. 292, 149 Ga. 498.

Damages unliquidated

Mere finding of breach of contract without computation and assessment of damages does not give jurisdiction under some statutes to restrain defendant from collecting judgment for tort against plaintiff and another defendant pending plaintiff's creditors' suit.—Stone Timlow & Co. v. Stryker, 119 N.E. 655, 280 Mass. 67.

Special cause to prevent insolvent discharge

If it is sought to enjoin defendant from proceeding to obtain a discharge under the insolvent laws, special cause must be shown for the injunction.—Schanck v. Sniffen, 1 Barb., N. Y., 32.

of the indebtedness of defendant to the judgment debtor, he cannot object to making such discovery because answer under oath is waived.⁷⁵

Where the answers are responsive to the charges contained in the bill, they must be taken to be true,⁷⁶ unless they are proved to be false;⁷⁷ but averments in the answer which are not responsive to any charge in the bill, and which set up matters as to which no discovery is sought, are not to be taken as true.⁷⁸ By setting down the cause for hearing on the bill and answer, complainant is taken to admit the truth of the whole of defendant's answer, not only of the facts stated in direct response to the bill, but also those set up by way of affirmative defense.⁷⁹ However, under some statutes, answers are not usually sustained by the respondent's affidavit, and are not regarded as evidence, whether they are sworn to or not.⁸⁰

The refusal of defendant to answer interrogatories contained in the bill is not to be taken as an admission of the allegations of the bill which have not been answered, however much it may arouse suspicion against him.⁸¹

d. Decree and Enforcement

Full satisfaction of their claims is all the relief complaining creditors are entitled to under a bill of discovery.

Full satisfaction of their claims is all the relief complaining creditors are entitled to under a bill of discovery, and, therefore, a decree is improper

which directs the debtor to pay over to a receiver a sum in excess of the aggregate sum asked for by complainants.⁸² In some jurisdictions, in an action to subject property of a defendant to the satisfaction of a judgment against him, in which action persons holding property in which the debtor has any interest may be made defendants, the remedy to compel such answers as the court may direct is to require full discoveries by process of contempt.⁸³ The right to compel disclosure on special motion in case of a failure by defendant to answer all interrogatories is addressed to the discretionary power of the court.⁸⁴ In proceedings in chancery in aid of an unsatisfied judgment and execution, an interlocutory order for discovery should specify the place for defendant's appearance.⁸⁵

Stryker, 119 N.E. 655, 230 Mass. 67.

Special cause to prevent insolvent discharge

If it is sought to enjoin defendant from proceeding to obtain a discharge under the insolvent laws, special cause must be shown for the injunction.—Schanck v. Sniffen, 1 Barb., N. Y., 32.

where the object of the bill is to subject choses in action, equitable assets, etc., an injunction is granted to prevent the assignment by the debtor of his interest in such property, or the payment to him of any moneys which he might otherwise collect, or the disposal of the property by a codefendant in possession thereof.⁸⁹ Such an injunction is usually granted as a matter of course.⁹⁰ A decree may be granted enjoining a debtor from disposing of his property where the creditors' bill is taken pro confesso, even though no fraud is alleged;⁹¹ and the fact that another action, whether prior or subsequent to the creditors' bill, is pending on behalf of all creditors who may come in constitutes no objection to the granting of an injunction.⁹² The court having appointed a receiver for property in a creditors' suit and directed its sale by him, it should enjoin the holder of a mortgage fieri facias from selling a part of the property.⁹³ The injunction should not be general, but should be directed to a specific debt or trust pointed out in the bill and proved by oath to exist;⁹⁴ and in order to stay proceedings at law, should go against the party, and not against the sheriff or other officer who is acting under the mandate of the court, and who would be put in peril of disobedience by discordant orders of conflicting jurisdictions.⁹⁵

The bill must set forth sufficient facts to warrant the issuance of an injunction.⁹⁶ Thus, a creditors' bill alleging merely that complainant has unsatisfied judgments against defendant, and that defendant has demands due from a codefendant for money due and for personalty held in trust, and praying for an injunction to enjoin defendant from disposing of his claims or property, does not justify an injunction restraining the codefendant from encumbering his property.⁹⁷ Where a creditors' bill is insufficient to authorize the issuance of an injunction, an injunction should not be issued, although the bill may be capable of such amendment as would justify the issuance of the writ.⁹⁸

While the court will not grant an injunction on an ex parte application against defendant trustees in possession of personal property, where it is not alleged that they are insolvent, transient, or irresponsible,⁹⁹ the bill need not be supported by affidavits aliunde the affidavit of complainant to the bill, in order to entitle complainant to an injunction.¹

b. Notice; Operation and Effect of Injunction

Ordinarily, an injunction will not be granted without giving the opposite party an opportunity to be heard; such injunctions generally operate only on the debtor.

An injunction should rarely be awarded without giving the opposite party a chance to be heard and to file affidavits in answer to the bill;² but the granting of an injunction restraining the transfer of property by defendants will be sustained, although it was without notice to one defendant, where it appeared that the rights of complainant would have been unduly prejudiced had an attempt been made to serve such defendant with notice;³ and after the bill has been taken for confessed, an application for injunction may be made without any notice.⁴

The injunction should not issue until the court has made an order so directing.⁵

Operation and effect. An injunction issued to persons not parties to the suit is inoperative as to them, except as notice.⁶ An ordinary injunction on

Nothing to operate on

Where there are liens more than sufficient to absorb the debtor's interest in the property sought to be reached, and there would be nothing left which could be reached and subjected to the payment of complainant's claim, there is nothing for an injunction to operate on, and there is no necessity therefor.—*McCullough v. Injunction held binding

Injunction enjoining all creditors from proceeding otherwise than in suit was held binding on judgment lienholder who had actual notice of injunction, although he was not served with process in creditors' proceeding, the advertisement ordered for the notification of creditors serving as process.—Sweetwater Bank & Trust Co. v. Howard, 66 S.W.2d 225, 16 Tenn.App. 91.

a creditors' bill operates only on the debtor;⁷ it does not prevent a particular creditor from establishing his claim by judgment, such judgment not to entitle him to preference over other creditors;⁸ nor does it prevent a judgment creditor, not a party to the suit, from levying on the property of the debtor that is subject to sale, under execution, before defendant's title is equitably divested by an order of sequestration or the appointment of a receiver.⁹ An order restraining creditors from bringing suit and requiring them to prove their claims does not invalidate a decree of the same court in another cause establishing a claim which could have been proved under such order.¹⁰ An injunction obtained on the filing of the original bill does not affect the right of the debtor to dispose of property subsequently acquired;¹¹ and an injunction restraining a defendant in a creditors' suit from in any way disposing of, or intermeddling with, the debtor's property, whether in his possession or not, does not prevent him from taking care of and protecting property in his possession from tortfeasors.¹² Complainant cannot, after obtaining an injunction restraining the debtor from collecting his choses in action, levy a new execution on money paid to an agent of the debtor pendente lite on account of one of the choses in action involved in the suit.¹³

c. Violation of Injunction

After service of an injunction, the debtor commits a contempt by applying money in his possession to the payment of other debts.

An injunction against a judgment debtor is violated by his applying money previously earned or in his possession at the time of the service of the injunction to the payment of other debts.¹⁴ So, where the injunction prohibits any transfer of the debtor's property, it is a violation thereof for the debtor to inform a creditor, not a party to the suit, that he has property applicable to the payment of his claims, and to procure an agent to obtain execution and deliver property to a sheriff holding execution;¹⁵ but such injunction does not prevent defendant from confessing judgment in favor of other creditors, although he is aware of their intention to obtain a preference by levying on the property.¹⁶ So, after service of the ordinary injunction in a creditors' suit, defendant is not guilty of contempt by proceeding to judgment in a suit previously commenced,¹⁷ nor is the mere bringing of an action for an injury to property belonging to the debtor, without the recovery of a judgment, a breach of the injunction.¹⁸

By violating the injunction, defendant commits a contempt, and will be punished summarily therefor by the imposition of costs or otherwise.¹⁹

d. Dissolution of Injunction

While an injunction improvidently granted will be dissolved, it is not uncommon to retain the injunction until complainant has a fair opportunity to offer testimony, especially where the ends of justice will be better subserved thereby.

While the injunction will be dissolved whenever it has been allowed improvidently,²⁰ a motion to dissolve the injunction resting only on the answer before the proofs are in is addressed to the sound discretion of the court,²¹ and it is not uncommon to retain the injunction until complainant has had a fair opportunity to take testimony, especially where the ends of justice will be better subserved thereby.²² Thus, an injunction will not be dissolved on the denial of defendant in his answer that he has

Simple affidavit

An injunction will not be dissolved on a simple affidavit contradicting a material fact to which complainant has positively sworn in his bill;

any property or choses in action or any interest in property,²³ to the amount sought to be recovered.²⁴ However, where it appears from the answer and affidavits that complainant's bill is without equity, the injunction will be dissolved;²⁵ but a mere formal traverse of the charges of the bill in the precise phraseology in which the charges are made, without a full and explicit denial of the equity of the bill, is not sufficient;²⁶ and an injunction should not be dissolved on a denial of the full equity of the bill, if there is good reason for retaining the property in the receiver's hands.²⁷

Failure of a creditor who has obtained an order enjoining the debtor from collecting his debts and disposing of perishable property to apply for the appointment of a receiver is ground for dissolving an injunction,²⁸ as is also the failure of complainant to use due diligence in the prosecution of the suit.²⁹

Where, after the filing of a creditors' bill, defendant is let in to defend in the action at law, and the judgment is allowed to stand as a security, an injunction granted in the creditors' suit should be retained until the final result of the new trial is ascertained, unless defendant gives security to pay whatever may be recovered against him in the action at law.³⁰

- a. In general
- b. Application, notice, and hearing
- c. Title of receiver; assignment of property
- d. Possession and control of receiver
- e. Accounting, compensation, expenses, and discharge
- f. Actions

a. In General

Under proper circumstances, it is a well established practice to appoint a receiver of the defendant's property in aid of a creditors' bill, and such appointment cannot generally be collaterally attacked.

It is a well established practice to appoint a receiver of defendant's property in aid of a creditors' bill whenever it appears that the property is in peril or in danger of waste, especially where the equity of the bill is not denied.³¹ Such appointment is discretionary with the court, however, and may be refused unless there are special and peculiar circumstances requiring summary relief,³² and an application for the appointment of a receiver will be denied where the bill is without equity.³³ A judgment creditors' bill praying for the appointment of a receiver must comply strictly with the statute prescribing the conditions warranting the institution of a judgment creditors' suit.³⁴ Where the complaint fails to state a 'cause of action, the order appointing a receiver is void,³⁵ and a sub-defendant must put in his answer and then move to dissolve on the bill and answer.—Strange v. Longley, 3 Barb.Ch., N.Y., 650.

35. Consent immaterial

That debtor corporation consented to appointment of receiver of its assets in creditor's suit was immaterial on question of whether court acquired jurisdiction.—McCutcheon v. Superior Court in and for Los Angeles County, 24 P.2d 911, 134 Cal. App. 5.

sequent order based on the assumed validity of the former order is likewise void.³⁶ In considering the propriety of appointing a receiver on a creditors' bill, the bill must be looked to as it is; it is immaterial that it may be capable of such amendment as will justify the appointment of a receiver.³⁷ Unless the requirement is waived, a creditor seeking receivership must first obtain a judgment at law;³⁸ but a receiver may be appointed pendente lite notwithstanding a cross bill alleging the judgments were void for lack of service.³⁹

A lien creditor may apply for the appointment of a receiver to prevent waste prior to actual default,⁴⁰ and it has been held that a receiver may be appointed even before it appears that there is any property of the debtor to be administered by him;⁴¹ but where it is shown by the answer that there are on the property described in the bill liens which are more than sufficient to absorb defendant's interest therein, there is nothing for the receiver to take charge of, and no necessity for the appointment of a receiver;⁴² and, conversely, a receiver should not be appointed to take possession of property greatly in excess of enough to secure the claims against the judgment debtors.⁴³ A deposit in court sufficient to meet the creditor's claim will prevent the appointment of a receiver,⁴⁴ but where other creditors have asserted claims in the action, defendant cannot defeat the appointment of a receiver by paying the judgment of plaintiff.⁴⁵ Also, an offer by defendant to turn out to the sheriff sufficient property to satisfy the execution is no defense to the appointment of a receiver, as defendant has his remedy against the sheriff if he makes a false return.⁴⁶

Where the property sought to be reached is in the hands of a mortgagee or trustee, it is not proper to appoint a receiver to take the property out of his hands, unless he is insolvent, or unless there are special circumstances showing that the property is in danger,⁴⁷ but in order to reach a debt from trustees to the principal debtor, it is proper to appoint receiver to hold moneys paid by the trustees.⁴⁸ So, where the property is under the control of a receiver previously appointed in supplementary proceedings, the court will not appoint another receiver on the application of a creditor filing a creditors' bill;⁴⁹ and where two or more suits are brought by creditors of the same debtor, each bill being filed in behalf of the complaining creditor alone, and the appointment of a receiver is proper, the court, instead of appointing several receivers, usually appoints the same person receiver in each suit, or, where a receiver has already been appointed, extends the receivership to the other suits,⁵⁰ in which latter case it is the duty of the receiver appointed in the first suit to consent to the extension of the receivership.⁵¹ In a suit to subject lands to the payment of liens thereon, the court may, in a proper case, appoint a receiver to take charge of the lands and rent the same until a sale can be made;⁵² but it is error to appoint a receiver to rent out land, pending the rendition of a decree in a separate suit to determine the interest of the judgment debtor in the land, where it does not appear that the debtor is insolvent and it does appear that the land is worth more than the amount of the lien proved against it.⁵³

Collateral attack. Where the court had jurisdiction of the proceeding, the appointment of a receiver cannot be collaterally attacked.⁵⁴

Failure to levy

An order appointing a receiver will not be set aside on the ground that defendant had sufficient property to pay the judgment, and that the sheriff returned the execution nulla bona without attempting to levy on such property, where there is no pretense of collusion between the sheriff and plaintiff, the remedy being to pay the judgment, and sue the sheriff for the extra cost and expense to which defendant has been put.—Rawdon v. b. Application, Notice, and Hearing

In the absence of exceptional circumstances, a receiver should not be appointed without notice to the defendant.

Ordinarily, a receiver should not be appointed until after answer;⁵⁵ but a receiver may be appointed on the filing of the bill and before answer, where there are unusual circumstances requiring immediate action.⁵⁶ However, except in strong cases of emergency and peril,⁵⁷ a receiver should not be appointed without notice to defendant, at least until after the time for his appearance has expired,⁵⁸ and a copy of the bill should be served before moving for a receiver.⁵⁹ Some cases hold that the appointment of a receiver may be made without notice of the application, where the equity of the bill is not denied;⁶⁰ and after the bill has been taken for confessed against defendant because of his failure to appear, application may be made for the appointment of a receiver ex parte and without notice.⁶¹ Where the application for a receiver is made before defendant has filed his answer, defendant may be heard on his affidavit, by way of defense to the application;⁶² and it is proper to permit affidavits to be read by complainant on the hearing of a motion for a receiver to meet matters set up in avoidance in defendant's answer.⁶³ It is no objection to a motion for a receiver that the bill waives answer on oath,⁶⁴ or that a motion for leave to amend a creditors' bill is pending, provided the defect in the bill is not fatal or does not render the bill demurrable.⁶⁵ In an action by judgment creditors of a grantor against the grantee to subject the lands to payment of the judgments, the appointment of a receiver for the grantee may be opposed by showing that the judgments were obtained by fraud, he not having been a party to the actions in which the judgments were rendered,⁶⁶ but the debtor himself, however, cannot oppose an application for a receiver on the ground that the judgment against him is invalid,⁶⁷ and the return of the execution unsatisfied is conclusive on him on the hearing of a motion for a receiver.⁶⁸

The court may order the defendant to make an assignment of his property to the receiver when necessary to vest title in him.

As respects the debtor's personal estate, it has been held that the appointment and qualification of a receiver vests title in him as of the date of the order of appointment without the execution of any transfer or assignments by the debtor;⁶⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.⁷⁰ As respects the debtor's real property, the rule is different; a conveyance by the debtor to the receiver is necessary to vest title in him.⁷¹ So, the appointment of a receiver will not per se vest a title in the receiver to the trust income of the debtor, although the income may have already accrued and be in the hands of the trustee.⁷²

The court appointing a receiver has power to order an assignment or conveyance to him by the debtor,⁷³ and may order property in hands of one other than the debtor delivered to the receiver pendente lite.⁷⁴ A debtor's affidavit that he has no property will not excuse him from executing a formal assignment of all his property to a receiver.

Neglect to execute

The fact that defendant neglects to execute an assignment as directed by the court furnishes the master no grounds for refusing to direct defendant to deliver over his property to the receiver, and to decide what property defendant has in his possession, or under his control, which ought to be delivered over pursuant to the order.—Eldred v. Hall, 9 Paige, N.Y., 640.

74. N.J.—Kemeny v. Wentz, 147 A. 587, 105 N.J.Eq. 296.

er;⁷⁵ nor will the filing of a petition in bankruptcy between the filing of the creditors' suit and the order to transfer property.⁷⁶ Where defendant admits that he has certain property but denies that he has any other, the order for delivery of his property to the receiver must be general.⁷⁷ Creditors prosecuting a bill for the discovery of assets are not entitled to an order requiring their debtor to pay to a receiver more than the amount of their claims, although the bill was brought in behalf of all creditors who might come in.⁷⁸

An assignment to a receiver does not pass a right of action in the debtor for an injury to property exempt from execution,⁷⁹ nor for a mere personal tort.⁸⁰ It is otherwise, however, as to a right of action for an injury to property to which complainant has a right to resort to satisfy his claim.⁸¹ The assignment executed by the debtor should contain an exception of property exempt by law from sale on execution, notwithstanding the general order of reference,⁸² and notwithstanding the fact that a fraudulent assignment of all the debtor's property has been set aside.⁸³ It need not, however, contain a reservation of property which the debtor holds merely in the character of trustee for others, and in which he has no beneficial interest;⁸⁴ and it is neither necessary nor proper for the master, in settling the form of the assignment, to insert an exception therein of property held in trust for defendant under a trust which proceeded from some other person.⁸⁵

The function of the receiver is to hold the property as an officer of the court, so that when all conflicting interests have been determined, the residue in his hands may be paid over to the party entitled thereto.⁸⁶ Under some circumstances and for some purposes, a receiver represents the creditors for whose benefit the suit is brought as well as the person or estate in receivership,⁸⁷ but the receiver is not an innocent purchaser of an insolvent estate's assets.⁸⁸ As to a creditor who is not a party to the suit, the title of the receiver to the property of the debtor does not relate to the time of the filing of the bill, but only to the time when the assignment to the receiver is made.⁸⁹

Ordinarily, third persons may not interfere with property in the possession of a receiver.

The court will restrain any persons within its jurisdiction from taking steps which will prevent the receiver from getting the property of the debtor into his hands,⁹⁰ although not by summary process as against those not parties to the suit.⁹¹ A creditor cannot sue out execution and cause it to be levied on property to which the receiver is entitled;⁹² but a sale by a sheriff under execution of land in the possession of the receiver and subject to the lien of a judgment does not disturb the receiver's possession.⁹³ A receiver appointed by a domestic court on a bill to enforce a domestic judgment may hold the debtor's assets against a domestic attaching creditor, although the bill was filed by a citizen of another state.⁹⁴

The receiver holds the debtor's choses in action in preference to one who purchased the same of the debtor after notice of the filing of the bill;⁹⁵ but he is not entitled to an adjudication or preliminary examination awarding him the possession of property and book accounts transferred by the debtor to another who is made a party defendant.⁹⁶ The rents and profits of real estate of a debtor during the time allowed for redemption from sale go to the receiver immediately.⁹⁷ Where a debtor's tenants have attorned to the receiver, they will not be permitted to question his rights by disturbing his possession.⁹⁸ Where a demurrer to a bill to reach property in the hands of a third person is sustained, the functions of a receiver appointed to collect and hold rents and profits cease inter partes, but his amenability to the court as an officer thereof continues, and the fund itself is subject to the court's order.⁹⁹ If the receiver takes possession of goods, apparently in the debtor's possession but which are claimed by a third person, he will be ordered to restore them on claimant's undertaking to hold them subject to the order of the court to be made after title is settled.¹ The sale and conveyance of property under order of court is discussed infra § 80.

e. Accounting, Compensation, Expenses, and Discharge

A receiver should be required to account, and is ordinarily entitled to compensation and expenses lawfully incurred.

It is error to dismiss a creditors' bill without requiring a receiver appointed in the suit to account.² A receiver is generally entitled to recover compensation and expenses lawfully incurred.³ The expenses of a receiver in caring for property are a charge on it, although it belongs to a person other than the judgment debtor.⁴

A party may be estopped to have a receiver discharged.⁵

f. Actions

A receiver may sue to recover or protect the debtor's property.

Where a receiver of a debtor's property is appointed in a creditors' suit, he may sue at law for the recovery of the debtor's property.⁶ He may file a bill in chancery to collect money which he claims is held in trust for the debtor, although he may have a concurrent remedy at law, and in such case he need not first obtain a judgment at law and issue execution, judgment and execution having been previously obtained by complainant in the creditors' suit.⁷ The receiver may pursue by suit in his own name funds of the debtor which have been fraudulently transferred,⁸ even though the creditor by amending his bill might impeach the same fraudulent transaction,⁹ but a receiver appointed in a creditors' suit in one state cannot maintain suit in another state to set aside a fraudulent conveyance of the debtor.¹⁰ A receiver appointed to collect rents may maintain a bill to protect his rights against others who have taken possession of the premises, where the debtor neglects to make an assignment giving the receiver the legal title;¹¹ and a receiver of the property of a cestui que trust may avoid the trustee's purchase of the trust property.¹²

No benefit to creditors

Where receiver discovered no property and reached no assets properly reachable in a creditors' suit, he is not entitled to compensation for continuing the debtor's business and realizing a fund, where he did so solely for the purposes of maintaining the reputation of the property of the debtor as a place for race meetings, postponing the foreclosure of a senior mortgage on the property as long as possible, and producing, when the enforcement of that security occurred, the largest possible sum; nor should he be allowed for disbursements made to his attorneys; and where he paid interest on a first mortgage on the property and taxes thereon, but no benefit to the fund derived from the continuance of the business resulted from such payments, he is not entitled to credit for such payments as against the fund realized; but he should be allowed all disbursements necessary to conducting the business.—Campau v. a. In General

A creditors' bill must state facts showing the complainant's right to relief.

Ordinarily no particular form of bill or complaint and no formal specific allegations are necessary. It is sufficient to state facts from which the inference may be drawn that the aid of a court of equity is required to give the creditor relief.¹⁶ The rules of equity pleading apply to creditors' bills.¹⁷ The bill must allege, clearly and definitely, every fact necessary to entitle complainant to relief;¹⁸ and a bill is defective which fails to show that the court in which it is filed has jurisdiction of the parties and of the property,¹⁹ and that the case is one for equitable intervention and there is no adequate remedy at law.²⁰ A bill or

General averments insufficient

The allegations in a creditors' bill relating to the matter of jurisdiction cannot be shown by general averments that plaintiff has no remedy or no adequate remedy without assistance of a court of equity, but facts must be alleged showing that only in equity will the remedy be full, adequate, and complete, and the facts must speak for themselves.—Stewart v. Manget, 181 So. 370, 132 Fla. 498.

Construction of bill

Judgment creditor's bill against judgment debtor corporation alleging that execution issued on her judgment was returned "No property found," and that defendant owned no property other than certain patents, and asking for the conveyance of the patents to a receiver to be appointed by the court, and for the sale thereof by the receiver and the application of the proceeds to the payment of her judgment, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from disposing of patents, is a bill by a judgment creditor to subject intangible property, which cannot be reached by an execution at law, to the satisfaction of complainant's judgment.—International Moving Picture & Film Co. v. Smith, 99 So. 303, 211 Ala. 3.

complaint filed under a statute must comply strictly with the conditions prescribed by the statute,²¹ and, if the necessary allegations are lacking, the defect cannot be cured by consent of the parties.²²

b. Allegations as to Parties

The bill must contain proper allegations as to the parties.

The bill must allege that plaintiff is a creditor of defendant debtor,²³ and inform defendant when and how the indebtedness claimed arose, as stated infra § 65 c. However, a bill to enforce a judgment against land, the legal title to which is in the debtor's daughter, alleging that the debtor purchased the land with his own money and caused the conveyance to be made to his daughter, pleading facts negating the idea that the conveyance was a gift, and alleging that the daughter has no beneficial interest in the land, but holds it in trust for her father, is sufficient as a bill to enforce the judgment against the debtor's equitable estate without an averment that complainant was a creditor when the land was purchased and the title placed in the daughter.²⁴ If the debt is in judgment, the ownership of the judgment by plaintiff at the time the bill is filed must be alleged,²⁵ and it is not sufficient to allege ownership of the execution

Allegations held insufficient

Davis Sewing Mach. Co.*, C.C.A.Del., 292 F. 135, affirming, D.C., 284 F. 161, and 285 F. 395.

(2) A bill against wife of decedent against whom judgments had been obtained, to subject property which was formerly community property to satisfaction of such judgments, was insufficient where it did not allege death or negative the fact or possibility of administration, nor allege that, although administration was then pending, relief had been denied or was unattainable.—First Nat. Bank v. Blackwell, D.C.Tex., 51 F.2d 282.

(3) A creditors' bill to subject ninety-acre tract, legal title to seventy acres of which was in name of owner's wife, to payment of judgment for two thousand dollars commission which broker might procure in action at law, was insufficient to allege a cause for equity jurisdiction, where it appeared from the face

Necessary allegations

A creditor who brings a statutory creditor's bill to reach and apply property of debtor which cannot be attached on writ or taken on execution must allege that he is a creditor, that principal defendant is a debtor having some valuable legal or equitable interest not exempted by law from attachment, of such a nature that it cannot be reached by common-law process against debtor, and that property is held by a third party who may be considered equitainventory, that the other failed to organize corporation but operated business under corporate name that plaintiff corporation at president's direction furnished the other merchandise which it charged to the supposed corporation, that the other promised to pay president, and that the president had not paid plaintiff, were not sufficient to constitute it a bill, under Massachusetts statute, to reach and apply in payment of a debt any property, right, title or interest, legal or equitable, of debtor which could not be reached to be attached or taken on execution in an action at law.—George Lawrence, Inc. v. Brodie, Mass., 20 N.E.2d 413.

(2) Creditor's bill to reach proceeds of check is insufficient for failure to allege that proceeds were not attachable in law action.—H. E. Shaw Co. v. Karcasinas, 180 N.E. 140, 278 Mass. 397.

(3) Plaintiff does not show a cause of action under the statute by allegation that he did not know form of proceeds or where they were.—H. E. Shaw Co. v. Karcasinas, supra.

(4) A creditor's bill, which was brought under statute providing for creditors' bills to reach and apply property of debtor which cannot be attached on writ or taken on execution in legal action, and which alleged that "plaintiff is informed" that defendant held property of debtor which could not be reached by legal process, was defective, since such allegation in equity raised no issue.—Darling Automobile Co. v. Hall, 197 A. 558, 135 Me. 382.

issued on the judgment²⁶ or of the obligations on which the judgment was recovered.²⁷ Where a creditor is permitted to sue in his own behalf alone, the bill need not state that it is in behalf of all creditors nor need it contain any invitation to other creditors to come in,²⁸ although it shows that there are other creditors beside plaintiff.²⁹ Where plaintiff sues in behalf of other creditors, the bill should allege the existence of other creditors.³⁰ A bill which states that it is in behalf of all creditors "who may be entitled to become parties" is not objectionable in not being limited to lien creditors, where only lien creditors may become parties.³¹

Parties defendant. In order to excuse the non-joinder of a joint debtor on the ground that he is wholly irresponsible and destitute of property, that ground should be distinctly averred, either positively or on information and belief, so that the adverse party may take issue thereon.³² A general averment that defendant is primarily liable for the payment of the obligations on which the judgment was recovered is too indefinite to excuse plaintiff from making the other judgment debtors parties.³³

c. Description of Indebtedness

The necessity for, and the sufficiency of, a description of the indebtedness of the defendant depends on the nature of the particular suit.

When the suit is brought by a creditor at large, the indebtedness of defendant must be accurately described as in ordinary actions of debt or assumpsit, and care must be taken to show that complainant's claim was due and payable when the bill was filed;³⁴ but, when the claim has been reduced to judgment, the indebtedness on which the judgment was recovered need not be set forth.³⁵ A bill brought under a statute authorizing suits by creditors to reach and apply, in payment of a debt, any property which cannot be reached to be attached or taken on execution at law, is not insufficient because it does not set forth the nature of plaintiff's debt or cause of action.³⁶

d. Allegations as to Judgment

The bill must allege the recovery of a valid subsisting judgment, and show, either that the judgment was obtained in the jurisdiction where suit is brought, or that it was impossible to obtain such judgment.

In the absence of statutory provisions of circumstances dispensing with the necessity of obtaining a judgment,³⁷ a creditors' bill must sufficiently allege the recovery and present existence of a valid judgment as a basis for the bill.³⁸ So the bill must set forth a judgment obtained in the jurisdiction where the suit is brought³⁹ or must show that it was impossible to obtain such judgment.⁴⁰

e. Allegations as to Exhaustion of Legal Remedies

- (1) In general
- (2) Issuance and return day of execution
- (3) To what county execution issued
- (4) Return of execution

(1) In General

When exhaustion of legal remedies is essential, it must be alleged or facts stated excusing failure to exhaust such remedies.

Where exhaustion of legal remedies is essential before resorting to equity, it must of course be averred in the bill, or facts must be set forth excusing failure to exhaust the legal remedies.⁴¹

(2) Issuance and Return Day of Execution

The bill should allege the issuance of the execution, describing it, and the time of its issuance and return.

The bill should allege that the execution actually issued, and should describe it, stating the respective dates at which it issued and was returned.⁴²

(3) To What County Execution Issued

The bill must contain proper averments as to the county to which execution was issued.

Where the judgment is one on which an execution might have been issued to any county of the state, it is not sufficient to allege that an execution was issued to a named county, without alleging that the debtor resided in such county at the date of the issuance of the execution,⁴³ or without alleging some sufficient excuse for not issuing an execution to the county of the debtor's residence.⁴⁴ In Alabama the bill need not contain a specific allegation that the execution was issued to the county in which defendant had a fixed and known residence, but it devolves on defendant to show that the execution was issued to an improper county.⁴⁵ In Illinois allegations showing that the execution was issued to the sheriff of the county in which the judgment was recovered are sufficient, without an allegation that the judgment debtor, at the time of the issuance and delivery of the execution, resided in that county, the presumption being that defendant resided in the county where the suit was brought.⁴⁶ In Kentucky the petition must allege that the execution was directed to the county in which the judgment was rendered⁴⁷ or in which defendant resides.⁴⁸

(4) Return of Execution

The bill should allege the return of execution before the filing of the bill, and state the time the return was made. Subject to some exceptions, the bill must show that the execution was returned nulla bona; but the return need not be set forth in haec verba.

The bill should allege the actual return of the execution before the filing of the bill, and should state the time when it was made,⁴⁹ to enable the court to ascertain that the execution was actually returned before the filing of the bill.⁵⁰ As a rule the bill must show that the execution was returned nulla bona or unsatisfied;⁵¹ but this rule is subject to some exceptions.⁵² The return need not be set forth in haec verba;⁵³ it is sufficient to allege that the execution was returned nulla bona or "wholly unsatisfied."⁵⁴

f. Allegations as to Insolvency of Debtor

Where it is alleged that execution has been returned unsatisfied, the bill need not expressly allege the insolvency of debtor. Where the debtor's insolvency dispenses with the necessity for a return of execution, such excuse must be pleaded.

Where it is alleged that an execution has been issued and returned unsatisfied, it need not be averred expressly that the debtor is insolvent or has no other property than that out of which the creditor seeks payment.⁵⁵ Where the insolvency of the judgment debtor dispenses with the necessity for a return of an execution, such excuse, to be available, must be alleged in the bill.⁵⁶ In such cases an averment that the judgment debtor is insolvent,⁵⁷ or that he has no property left subject to execution,⁵⁸ or any allegation equivalent thereto,⁵⁹ is sufficient. A bill against several defendants, alleging the insolvency of only one, is insufficient.⁶⁰

g. Description of Property and Debtor's Interest

The property and interest of the debtor sought to be reached should be set out in the bill.

The property sought to be reached by a creditors' bill should be described with certainty,⁶¹ unless it is unknown to complainant, in which case he is not required to point out the property sought to be reached.⁶² The bill should allege the specific interest of the debtor sought to be reached.⁶³ It has been held, however, that a bill which fails to state specifically what the property is, is not for that reason demurrable, the remedy being by motion to make definite and certain.⁶⁴ The sufficiency of the description to create a lien is discussed infra § 84.

h. Allegations as to Collusion and Value of Property Not Subject to Execution

Unless the statute or a rule of court so requires, the bill need not allege that it is not prosecuted by collusion, or to protect the property against the claims of other creditors, or that the defendant has property not subject to execution to the value of a certain number of dollars.

Complainant need not allege that the bill is not proffered and prosecuted by collusion, or for the purpose of protecting the property and effects of the debtor against the claims of other creditors,⁶⁵ or that defendant has property not subject to execution to the value of a certain number of dollars,⁶⁶ in the absence of any statute or rule of court requiring it.⁶⁷ Even when an allegation negating collusion is required by a rule of court, it may be dispensed with when facts are stated from which it is apparent that there was no collusion.⁶⁸

i. Multifariousness

While a creditors' bill which seeks to litigate entirely distinct controversies is multifarious, a bill is not multifarious merely because it unites different matters arising out of the same transaction, or seeks relief on different or alternative theories.

A creditors' bill which joins several distinct and entirely unconnected matters or transactions is multifarious.⁶⁹ If the object of the bill is single and for the subjection of the debtor's property to the satisfaction of complainant's judgment, and the relief, if granted, must be the same as to any portion of such property, whether held by the debtor or in trust for him by another or by several, the

Judgment creditor's bill seeking to set up interest in realty to which judgment of 1926 might attach, alleging that defendant's father by will probated in 1921 provided for division of realty and personalty into four equal shares one of which was devised to defendant and that in 1931 executors conveyed realty as part of share devised to them for distribution, was sufficient to show a vesting of one-fourth interest in realty in defendant, and time of vesting was not required to be pleaded.—Guaranty Co. of Maryland v. Hubbard, 187 S.E. 313, 117 W.Va. 563.

Bill held insufficient

In creditor's suit to reach and apply in payment of debt the interests of debtor under an agreement and in certain land allegedly conveyed in trust, allegation that land was conveyed in trust and that agreement was entered into in July or August, 1935, was demurrable since it was not an allegation that the same facts existed in September, 1937, when the bill was filed.—Malden Trust Co. v. Bills held multifarious

(1) Creditors were not permitted to set aside a fraudulent conveyance and at the same time to compel a settlement of an assignment for the benefit of creditors to remove the trustee and have a receiver appointed.—Seals v. Pfeiffer, 77 Ala. 278.

(2) It is multifarious to seek satisfaction out of property assigned by the debtor without consideration, and also damages for waste committed on land purchased by plaintiff under an execution on his judgment.—Boyd & Suydam v. Hoyt & Parsel, 5 Paige, N.Y., 65.

bill is not multifarious, although the property is held by different persons under separate conveyances, or the relief is sought on different or alternative theories,⁷⁰ and although different defendants acquired different portions of the debtor's property, real and personal, at different times.⁷¹ A bill is not multifarious, although it is brought as well to reach equitable interests as to set aside an obstruction to the levy of an execution at law,⁷² or although it prays discovery as well as relief.⁷³ Multifariousness in bills in equity generally is discussed in the title Equity §§ 233-257, also 21 C.J. p 408 note 18-p 427 note 86.

j. Framing Bill with Double Aspect

A creditors' bill may be framed with a double aspect.

The bill may be framed with a double aspect, as in aid of execution and to reach property not subject to execution,⁷⁴ or to seek payment out of property which the debtor has fraudulently conveyed, and also out of choses in action, equitable interests, and other property not reachable by execution.⁷⁵

k. Prayers

A creditors' bill which purports to be filed in behalf of all creditors should contain a prayer not only for the payment of complainant's debt, but also for the payment of the debts of all other creditors who might come in and prove their claims.⁷⁶ A prayer for judgment that defendants be compelled to pay plaintiff the amount of his judgment is correct, and does not stamp the action as a legal rather than an equitable one.⁷⁷ A bill to subject the equitable estate of a debtor to the payment of complainant's claim is not demurrable because some additional relief is sought that may be obtained in connection with the discovery which is the main equity on which the bill rests.⁷⁸ Where the petition contains a prayer for general relief, it is not wholly bad because petitioner is not entitled to a part of the specific relief prayed for;⁷⁹ and, although the specific prayers for relief are defective, complainant will, under the prayer for general relief, be awarded such relief as is consistent with the case made out by the bill and within the issues, as stated infra § 75.

l. Verification

The bill must be properly verified when verification is required.

In some jurisdictions a bill which seeks discovery of legal assets belonging to defendant is insufficient unless verified by oath,⁸⁰ but, when discovery is

Particular bills held not multifarious

(1) A bill, the general purpose of which is to subject assets of the principal defendants to the valid liens of their creditors, is not multi-furious because, as incidental to such relief, it also seeks the cancellation of tax deeds on portions of the property, the equitable apportionment of the taxes for which such sales were made, as between the portions of the property covered by different liens, and to set aside special assessments made by a city for street improvements, alleged to be unconstitutional and void, and to that end joins as defendants the officers of the city and others interested in such tax deeds.—Bidwell v. Huff, C.C.Ga., 103 F. 352.

merely incidental to the relief sought in matters of ordinary equitable cognizance, the bill need not be verified by oath.⁸¹ The allegation negating collusion, required by rule of court, must be sworn to.⁸² When verification is required, if the averments of the bill are positive, the verification must be so;⁸³ but, when they are on information and belief, the verification must embrace both the facts that affiant has been informed and that he believes them to be true, either in terms, or by affirming positively that the facts alleged in the bill are true as therein stated.⁸⁴ Verification according to affiant's best belief and recollection is insufficient.⁸⁵ It is sufficient for complainant to swear to the obtaining of the judgment and return of the execution nulla bona on information of his attorney.⁸⁶ The verification may be by the attorney or his clerk who had charge of the collection of the debt, conducted the proceedings at law, and had personal knowledge of the facts stated in the bill.⁸⁷ Where a bill is verified by complainant's agent who is not also his solicitor, the jurat should state the person verifying to be the agent of complainant;⁸⁸ but, where it is verified by the oath of complainant's solicitor, the court will take notice of that fact from the records and proceedings in the cause.⁸⁹

a. Plea or Answer

The ordinary rules of equity pleading apply to the plea or answer in creditors' suits. The defendant is bound by admissions of fact in the answer, and allegations of the bill are admitted by failure of the answer to deny them.

The ordinary rules of equity pleading apply to the plea or answer in creditors' suits.⁹⁰ An answer alleging that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law states a conclusion merely and is insufficient.⁹¹ An answer is insufficient which avers merely that defendant has no recollection and does not believe that any declaration or process was served on him in the suit in which the judgment was entered.⁹² A general assertion in an answer to a judgment creditors' bill that defendant has property liable to execution, and which might have been levied on, is insufficient; he must state what and where the property was that the sheriff ought to have seized but did not seize.⁹³ So, an answer is insufficient which avers merely that defendant does not admit that he has no property on which to levy;⁹⁴ but in an action in the nature of a creditors' bill brought to subject to the lien of a judgment lands owned by one not a judgment debtor, an answer alleging that the judgment debtor has property which is or can be made available to the payment of the judgment states a defense and is not demurrable.⁹⁵

Sufficiency of verification

(1) Statement of affiant that he had read bill and knew the contents and that they were true of his own knowledge, "except as to the matters stated on information and belief, and as to those he believes it to be true," was sufficient.—National Plumbing & Heating Supply Co. v. Illinois Wood Preserving Co., 239 Ill.App. 69.

(2) Where complaint stated some matters positively and others on information and belief, affidavit by complainant's attorney that affiant of his own knowledge knows that the facts are true as stated in the complaint was sufficient.—Guyton v. Terrell, 31 So. 83, 132 Ala. 66.

(3) But an affidavit that the allegations of the bill are true to the best of affiant's knowledge, information, and belief was insufficient.—Burgess v. Martin, 20 So. 506, 111 Ala. 656.

A plea that the execution was improperly returned unsatisfied, and that, as defendant was the owner of land in another county and had so informed plaintiff, he should have taken out an alias execution, is multifarious and bad.—Albany City Bank v. Dorr, Walk, Mich. 317.

Plea to jurisdiction

In Tennessee, the defense that there is no proper return or nulla bona is to the jurisdiction, and under the code must be made by a motion to dismiss, by demurrer, or by plea in abatement, and cannot be made by answer.—Turley v. Taylor, 3 Lea, Tenn. 171.

to the failure of the bill to allege facts which are thus admitted;⁹⁷ nor can he, by his answer to a supplemental complaint, withdraw or nullify the admissions made in the answer to the original complaint.⁹⁸ An allegation in a supplemental petition that plaintiff had obtained a judgment at law is admitted by an answer failing to deny such allegation.⁹⁹ Under a statute providing that every material allegation of a bill not controverted by an answer shall be taken as true, the only proper mode of controverting any allegation in a bill is for the answer to deny or controvert such allegation specifically, and a general denial is not proper pleading.¹ A bill under the statute by a judgment creditor against executors to subject the equitable interest of the debtor as devisee on the ground that such interest was not leviable on by execution, is not in the nature of a garnishment, and complainant is not bound by the sworn answer of the executors denying that the estate was indebted to the judgment debtor.²

b. Cross Bill

A cross bill germane to the original suit may be filed in a proper case.

Cross bills germane to the subject matter of the original suit may be filed.³ Where a lien creditor files a bill to ascertain the property of the debtor and the liens and priorities, a creditor defendant may file an answer in the nature of a cross bill attacking any of the liens involved as a fraudulent preference;⁴ but where plaintiff in an action in the nature of a creditors' bill brings in another party claiming to have an interest in the property, the latter cannot by answer assert against the debtor a claim for a money judgment.⁵ A defendant cannot file a cross bill in the nature of a creditors' bill based on a general claim.⁶

c. Replication

The complainant must file a replication where he desires to deny the truth of the answer. A general denial requires no replication; and a replication may be waived.

Where complainant desires to deny the truth of defendant's answer, he must do so by filing a replication.⁷ A general denial, however, requires no replication.⁸

Where defendants, as well as complainant, have taken depositions relative to the merits of the controversy, and have submitted the cause for final decree on bill, answer, exhibits, and deposition, defendants thereby waive the formality of a replication.⁹

d. Demurrer

The general rules of pleading are applicable in creditors' suits in determining the grounds of demurrer to the pleadings; whether a general or a special demurrer is required to reach certain defects; and as to the scope, sufficiency, and effect of a demurrer.

The failure to set forth matters which are not essential to the equity of the bill is not ground of demurrer; the nonexistence of such facts must be set up by answer or plea.¹⁰ Matters unnecessarily set forth in the bill are not ground for a demurrer,¹¹ the proper method of objecting to irrelevant averments being by motion to strike out.¹² Affirmative matters of defense can be presented only by answer and not by demurrer.¹³ A complaint which states a sufficient cause of action for equitable relief is not open to demurrer under the code.¹⁴ The objection to misjoinder of causes of action or multifariousness should be taken by demurrer,¹⁵ and

Nature of demurrer

A demurrer for multifariousness is substantially the same as a demurrer to a declaration at law for a misjoinder of causes of action or of different causes of action which cannot be properly litigated in the same suit, and such a demurrer goes to the whole bill, and either or both defendants may demur.—Boyd v. Hoyt, 5 Paige, N.Y., 65.

the demurrer should be special and not general.¹⁶ Where an answer alleges that plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law, an objection thereto on the ground that it states a conclusion merely may be raised by demurrer.¹⁷ A ground of demurrer should be so stated as to apprise the court of the real objection.¹⁸ A general demurrer by all defendants should be overruled where the bill discloses a ground for relief against one of them,¹⁹ and a demurrer to the whole bill cannot be sustained where complainant is entitled to a part of the relief demanded.²⁰ A complaint is good on general demurrer, although unnecessary parties are joined.²¹ It has been held that a general demurrer is sufficient to raise the objection that complainant has an adequate remedy at law,²² although under a statute requiring a demurrer to specify the grounds of objection, it has been held questionable whether a general demurrer is sufficient to raise the objection that the creditor has not recovered a judgment and exhausted his remedy at law.²³ A speaking demurrer based on the contents of a writing entirely variant from the allegations of the bill will not be sustained.²⁴ A demurrer admits the truth of the allegations of the bill.²⁵ A motion to dismiss a complaint as not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action may be treated as a demurrer.²⁶ Where a bill alleges facts in the alternative, and any of the alternative allegations are insufficient, a demurrer addressed to such insufficiency should be sustained.²⁷

§ 67. — Amended and Supplemental Pleadings

a. Amendments

b. Supplemental pleadings

a. Amendments

The bill or answer may be amended if sought at the proper time and the amendment does not materially change the cause of action or defense.

The court may permit an amendment of the bill in its discretion, for the purpose of making it more definite and certain, and curing informalities therein;²⁸ but where an amendment to a petition presents no issue on which a court or jury could pass, it will be refused.²⁹ It being the common practice, where judgment creditors, suing in behalf of themselves and all other lien creditors, specifically refer to only a portion of the debtor's real estate, to search out other property on which the judgments constitute liens and bring it before the court for administration, it is not necessary to amend the pleadings in order to do so, where third persons do not claim any interest in such other property;³⁰ but where it is claimed that the interests of others have attached, the proper mode is to file an amended bill or to bring the facts to the attention of the court by petition.³¹ A judgment creditor who feels that his rights have been injuriously affected by a voluntary partition of the property held in cotenancy and the taking possession by the debtor of his portion, should bring the matter to the attention of the court by an amendment of the bill.³² It has been held that an amendment may be allowed even though the bill as originally filed shows on its face that the remedy at law has not been exhausted,³³ but there is authority to the contrary.³⁴ Where the bill shows on its face, in connection with the summons, that the debt had been paid when the bill was filed, it is not susceptible of amendment.³⁵ As in other suits, it is not permissible to amend the bill so as to change its purpose and ask altogether different relief;³⁶

but an amendment is not a departure because it adds as parties to the bill some who were not made parties in the original bill.³⁷ The court may, in its discretion, after a demurrer has been sustained, permit an amendment by striking out the names of some of the complainants,³⁸ or by striking out an invitation to other creditors to join in the suit.³⁹ An alternative ground of relief may be set up by amendment when the matter of amendment might have been stated in the alternative in the bill as originally filed.⁴⁰ A creditor may not set up by amendment new matters or events which have arisen since the filing of the original bill,⁴¹ the proper course being to file a supplemental bill, as stated infra § 67 b. While the court has full discretionary power to allow amendments to equity pleadings at any time, and will exercise that power at any stage of the case on reasonable terms, or even without terms, if necessary for the preservation of some substantial right, it will not ordinarily allow amendments to the bill after the case has been reported to the law court. If the bill cannot then be sustained without further amendment, it will ordinarily be dismissed, with costs, and plaintiff will be left to bring a new bill.⁴² An amendment in matters of form merely may be made at any stage of the suit;⁴³ but it is within the discretion of the chancellor to refuse to permit an amendment of a bill after the cause has been heard and a decree entered.⁴⁴ The bill may in a proper case be amended to conform to the proof.⁴⁵ The refusal of the chancellor to strike out an amended

bill because it was filed without leave of court is tantamount to leave to file it.⁴⁶ A new summons is not necessary on an amended petition which seeks no other or different relief than the original petition.⁴⁷

An amendment of an answer in order to show a homestead right in the land sought to be reached may be allowed.⁴⁸ The rule permitting the rejection of an amended answer does not apply to an amended answer setting up facts presenting equitable defenses, the disposal of which is necessary to any final adjudication of the rights and priorities of the several creditors.⁴⁹ When a bill was amended by joining other persons as parties defendant, but did not change any other material allegations of the bill, an amended answer, containing much immaterial matter, and filed without leave of court, after the property had been sold, was properly stricken out.⁵⁰

b. Supplemental Pleadings

A supplemental bill may be filed to introduce matters occurring after the filing of the original bill which relate to and support the rights set up in the original bill; and in some cases new parties may be brought in by supplemental bill.

New events or new matters which do not change the parties before the court, or the rights and interests of the parties, but merely refer to and support the right and interests already urged in the bill, may be brought before the court by a supplemental bill;⁵¹ and if the original bill is suffi-

Judgment on debtor's cause of action after original bill filed

(1) In creditors' suit to reach and apply cause of action in favor of building contractor for damages for unlawful interference with building contract in satisfaction of debt, brought before judgment was obtained thereon in pending action, supplemental bill, in nature of amendment to original bill, showing cause of action had been reduced to judgment and bringing in additional defendants so as to control proceeds of judgment, was properly allowed.

cient to entitle complainant to one kind of relief, and facts subsequently occur which entitle him to other or more extensive relief, he may have such relief by setting out the new matter by supplemental bill;⁵² but where the original bill is wholly defective, so that no valid decree can be made thereon, a supplemental bill cannot be maintained on matters subsequently taking place; a new bill must be filed.⁵³ Accordingly, where jurisdiction does not exist at the time of the filing of the bill because of the want of judgment or execution, the defect will not be cured by the subsequent recovery of judgment and the issuance and return unsatisfied of execution thereon and the setting up of such facts in a supplemental bill;⁵⁴ and where the original bill is based on a judgment which is afterward set aside at law, complainant is not entitled to file a supplemental bill founded on a second judgment obtained pendente lite.⁵⁵ A supplemental bill is allowed and is necessary to discover and reach property acquired by defendant subsequently to the filing of the original bill;⁵⁶ and a supplemental bill may be filed to subject to the payment of a judgment obtained subsequently to the institution of the original bill, and on which execution has been issued and been returned nulla bona, property acquired subsequently to the filing of the original bill as well as property sought to be reached by the original bill.⁵⁷ In some cases, where proper parties are not before the court, they may be brought in by a supplemental bill.⁵⁸ Where rules of court require an averment as to the amount in controversy, if it appears in the original bill it need not be repeated in the supplemental bill.⁵⁹

Evidence of matters not pleaded is inadmissible. The proof must conform to the pleadings; but an immaterial variance will not prevent recovery.

In accordance with the general rule, the issues in a creditors' suit are those⁶⁰ and only those⁶¹ raised by the pleadings. The claim that creditors realized from securities and did not give the debtor credit therefor on their judgments against him on which their bill is founded cannot be considered, unless raised by defendants' pleadings.⁶² It has been held that the debtor cannot claim a fund sought to be reached by a creditors' bill as an exemption, unless he pleads it by way of answer;⁶³ but it has also been held that evidence showing a right to claim property as exempt is admissible under the general denial.⁶⁴ Where plaintiff's right to equitable relief depends entirely on the fact that the bill is filed to reach and apply property not subject to attachment or execution, the averments as to the existence of such property are jurisdictional, and must be proved as laid.⁶⁵ However, where the petition sets up matters entitling plaintiff to equitable relief, it is sufficient to prove them without proof of other matters alleged;⁶⁶ and the averments that defendant has property to the amount of one hundred dollars, and that the bill is not filed by collu-

—Bethlehem Fabricators v. H. D. Watts Co., supra.

(2) Where original bill by creditor sought to reach and apply cause of action in favor of debtor in satisfaction of debt, and supplemental bill, in nature of amendment to original bill, was filed alleging that debtor obtained judgment on cause of action and that execution was issued on judgment, judgment was held to stand in place of cause of action sought to be reached and applied by original bill to satisfaction of debt and was itself property which could be reached and applied by creditor. —Bethlehem Fabricators v. H. D. Watts Co., supra.

Notice of filing

Where evidence showed that defendant in creditors' suit had actual notice of filing of supplemental bill, and defendant was represented by counsel appearing specially for protection of interest in property within jurisdiction of court referred to in supplemental bill, further notice to defendant of filing of supplemental bill or issuance and service of process thereon was not necessary. —Bethlehem Fabricators v. sion, being required only by rule of court, constitutes no part of plaintiff's case, and need not be proved.⁶⁷

Variance. To authorize a recovery on a creditors' bill, the pleadings and proof must correspond;⁶⁸ but this doctrine will not be extended to prevent a recovery in case of an immaterial variance.⁶⁹

§ 69. Presumptions and Burden of Proof

Ordinarily, the burden is on the creditor to prove the facts essential to a recovery, and on the debtor to prove facts set up as a defense; but a party need not prove facts that reasonably may be presumed from other facts proved.

The burden is on complainant to prove his jurisdictional averments.⁷⁰ Thus, the allegations of the bill of recovery of a judgment, issuance of execution, and return thereof nulla bona must be proved.⁷¹ However, a return nulla bona makes a prima facie case that defendant has no sufficient property on which execution can be levied, casting on defendant the burden of adducing evidence to the contrary, as stated supra § 47; and a defendant claiming that complainant has not exhausted his remedies at law, and that attachment proceedings taken on the judgment have not been determined, must show these facts affirmatively, where the evidence of complainant makes a prima facie case of exhaustion of legal remedies.⁷² Where the failure to issue execution to the county of defendant's residence is set up as a defense to the bill, defendant must show that he not only resided or had a place of business in some county other than that to which the execution issued, but also that he had visible property there out of which the execution might have been satisfied if plaintiff had exercised due diligence.⁷³ Where an execution was returned on the day the complaint was sworn to and the summons dated, the presumption is that it was returned before the commencement of the action.⁷⁴ If the bill seeks to charge an equitable asset on the ground of the debtor's insolvency, such insolvency must be proved.⁷⁵ It has been held that in the absence of proof of the value of the assets of the debtor that could be reached by process at law, it appearing that they were such assets, it will be presumed that they were of sufficient value to satisfy complainant's debt;⁷⁶ but there is authority to the contrary where execution has been returned nulla bona.⁷⁷ The burden is on the creditor to show that assets which he seeks to subject to the payment of his claim are the property of the judgment debtor,⁷⁸ and where he seeks to subject a debt alleged to be due the debtor, he must establish that

Waiver by defendant

(1) A denial by the debtor that he has assets or securities in the hands of the other defendants which could not be reached at law, and the giving of evidence in support thereof, do not waive his objection to the jurisdiction of a court of equity, or relieve plaintiff of the burden of proving his jurisdictional averments.—Hosbor-Platt Co. v. Miller, 76 N.E. 650, 190 Mass. 285.

Essential elements to be proved

A judgment creditor who attempts to reach realty in satisfaction of judgment through action in equity must show existence of judgment recorded in county wherein realty is located, issuance to sheriff of county of debtor's residence, of execution which has been returned unsatisfied, and an obstruction to enforcement of execution against debtor's realty, debt.⁷⁹ It has been held, however, that where a third person intervenes, claiming the fund in suit, the burden is not on the creditor to show that the money did not belong to intervener;⁸⁰ and where a party to a creditors' bill claims to have acquired an interest for value and in good faith in a certificate of ownership of land in suit before the commencement of the litigation, the burden is on him to show that fact.⁸¹ A judgment creditors' bill is not sustained by proof merely of the judgment, execution, and return unsatisfied; it must be shown that defendant has property, either legal or equitable, either in hand or due from some one else, or that he has legal title to real estate which he withholds from the record, where that is alleged in the bill.⁸² In a statutory action to reach the debtor's corporate stock, plaintiff need not prove that the stock certificates are in possession of the debtor, where such proof is not required by the statute.⁸³ Complainant must establish the debt on which the bill is based;⁸⁴ but where the regularity of judgments on which the bill is founded is admitted, they are prima facie evidence of indebtedness, and the burden is on defendants to prove payment,⁸⁵ unless such time has elapsed as to give rise to a presumption of payment.⁸⁶ If it is sought to subject the land of nonresidents to payment of a debt, complainant must prove nonresidence.⁸⁷

§ 70. Admissibility of Evidence

The general rules as to the admissibility of evidence are applicable in creditors' suits.

Any competent evidence which is relevant and material to the issues is admissible in a creditors' suit.⁸⁸

§ 72. Dismissal before Hearing

Involuntary dismissal of a creditors' bill, before hearing, may be adjudged on sufficient grounds. The dismissal of the bill carries with it an answer attempted to be set up as a cross bill.

The right of complainant or intervener to control the suit, and hence to voluntarily dismiss or discontinue it, has been discussed supra § 59. Involuntary dismissal before the hearing, and the grounds therefor, are discussed infra this section. A creditors' bill may be dismissed before hearing for want of equity;⁹⁶ but a bill should not be dismissed on the ground of want of equity on its face unless it is manifest that no amendment can help it.⁹⁷ The fact that defendant in a bill of discovery on a return of no property has been adjudged not to be the owner of attached property does not entitle him to a dismissal of the bill, as plaintiff may continue the case on the docket until there has been a full answer disclosing the fact that there is no property subject to attachment.⁹⁸ It has been held that whenever it appears on trial of a creditors' suit that plaintiff has a remedy at law, the equitable proceeding should be dismissed;⁹⁹ but that a motion to dismiss a creditors' suit on the ground of an adequate remedy at law, made after an answer admitting the debt and the equities of the bill, and the appointment of a receiver who has incurred obligations and expenditures, comes too late.¹ Where on the trial no assets either legal or equitable are discovered, the bill should be dismissed.² A decree dismissing a creditors' bill, because complainant is a simple contract creditor and therefore not entitled to maintain the same, creditor's agent was acting for creditor in transactions relating to cotton, that creditor's agent informed debtor that creditor had mortgage on cotton and that it would have to be shipped to third person, and that cotton was turned over to third person in accordance with creditor's request.—Goldin v. Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, 179 S.E. 291, 50 Ga. App. 790.

(12) In creditors' suit to reach funds in hands of sole legatee, testimony of complainant's witnesses was held to establish promise by legatee to testatrix to turn over proceeds of estate to missing judgment debtor if or when he returned, in view of defendant's admissions, demeanor, reluctance to appear, documentary contradiction of her testimony, etc.—*Muller v. should be without prejudice.³ So, where land is settled on a wife for life to use for support of herself and her children, remainder to her children surviving her, and in a suit by general creditors it is not alleged nor apparent that any residue exists after deducting the support of herself and her children, the bill will be dismissed, but without prejudice as to such creditors as appear to hold specific liens on the trust property, yet who have not set them up in the suit, although reported without sufficient proof by the commissioner.⁴ The court may, likewise, dismiss without prejudice on refusing an amendment to a creditors' bill that cannot be sustained as such,⁵ or where there is nothing on which the decree could operate if granted.⁶ Where a statute provides that if complainant requires discovery the disclosure shall not be deemed conclusive if a replication is filed, it is error to dismiss a creditors' bill merely because the answer, properly replied to, fails to disclose assets in the hands of defendants alleged to hold property in trust for the debtor.⁷ Where there is evidence that one defendant purchased property of considerable value from the debtor, and he defaults and refuses to answer, it is error to dismiss as to him.⁸

Effect of dismissal. The dismissal of a bill in the nature of a creditors' bill necessarily carries with it an answer attempted to be set up as a cross bill.⁹

§ 73. Trial or Hearing

The trial or hearing must be in accordance with equity procedure. The court may determine the question of priority. Sufficient findings must be made and they will be so construed as to uphold the judgment or decree. In a proper case a stay of proceedings may be had.

Creditors' suits, being of a purely equitable character, must be tried according to the modes of procedure known to courts of equity; it is erroneous to try them as common-law cases.¹⁰ In a suit in a federal court by a judgment creditor against a judgment defendant and another who is alleged to be indebted to him on a money demand, complainant has a right to obtain a discovery from such defendant as to his indebtedness, and the right to an equitable lien thereon, to become effective and to be enforced when such indebtedness shall have been established in an action at law, and also the right to the appointment of a receiver with authority to bring such an action.¹¹ In accordance with the doctrine that complainant will be required to abide by the case made by his bill, he will not be permitted on the hearing to insist that a judgment treated by the bill as only prima facie evidence is conclusive on defendants.¹² In a creditor's suit against a decedent's estate, the court may determine the question of the priority of the assignment of notes secured by a vendor's lien.¹³ On a bill for statutory discovery, the ownership of property claimed to belong to the debtor, but in the hands of another person who lays claim to it in his own right, must be tried on final hearing before delivery to a receiver may be ordered.¹⁴

Submission of issues; questions of fact

(1) In an action in the nature of a creditors' bill to subject certain lands to the payment of plaintiff's claim, it is not error to refuse to submit to a jury the question of the title to the property, in view of Gen.St. 1915 § 7179, specifying what issues of fact shall be tried by the court.—Postlethwaite v. Edson, 187 P. 688, 106 Kan. 354.

(2) Whether there was consideration for note assigned to plaintiff was essentially fact question.—Westminster Nat. Bank v. Graustein, 170 N.E. 621, 270 Mass. 565, certiorari denied Graustein v. Westminster Nat. Bank, 51 S.Ct. 80, 282 U.S. 876, 75 L.Ed. 773.

(3) Under the facts shown, it was held error to sustain a demurrer to the evidence.—Kinkel v. Chase, 169 P. 1134, 102 Kan. 275.

Limiting issues

In creditor's suit to set aside deeds wherein creditor properly filed an ancillary bill for accounting as to proceeds of realty deeded, limiting the issues raised by the pleadings to the sole question as to what sum should be recovered according to the amount of proceeds received by defendants from a sale of property in question was proper.—Williams Realty & Loan Co. v. Simmons, 3 S.E.2d 580, 188 Ga. 184.

Instructions held not erroneous

(1) On trial of equitable petition to impound purchase money, a charge that, for creditor to recover, debtor must have sold materials to purchaser, was not objectionable as authorizing recovery if debtor was seller's agent.—Knapp Bros. Mfg. Co. v. Cook, 155 S.E. 321, 171 Ga. 330.

than defeat the judgment;¹⁵ and in the absence of any evidence as to how a levy under execution was made, a finding that execution was served on the person having money of the debtor in his possession, implies that it was duly served in compliance with the statute.¹⁶ A special finding that defendants executed a note to plaintiff, which was afterward "renewed," and that plaintiff obtained judgment on the renewal note, is a sufficient finding that the judgment was against defendants;¹⁷ and a finding that execution was duly issued out of the proper court, directed to the sheriff and against the proper defendant in execution, and that the execution was returned unsatisfied, is a sufficient finding that defendant had no property subject to execution.¹⁸ A finding not supported by the pleadings,¹⁹ or which is contrary to law,²⁰ is insufficient. A finding that a joint judgment against two debtors was fraudulently entered as to one of them requires a dismissal of a bill to discover assets of the judgment debtors, since the judgment was a unit, and could not be valid as to one of the debtors and invalid as to the other.²¹

Stay of proceedings. In a proper case the proceedings on a creditors' bill will be stayed a sufficient length of time to enable defendant to apply to a court of law for an order to set aside the judgment or execution for irregularity.²²

§ 74. — Reference

- a. In general
- b. Examination of defendant

a. In General

Pursuant to general equity practice, matters proper for reference may be referred to a master or commissioner, to determine matters submitted and make his report thereon to the court.

A reference should not be made to a commissioner or master who is a creditor and a party to the suit.²³ A decree or order of reference suspends all other pending suits for the administration of the debtor's assets;²⁴ and if, after a decree or sale is entered, other liens are directed to be audited and reference made for that purpose, such order or audit and reference suspends a decree of sale.²⁵ As heretofore shown, supra § 55, although a suit is brought by one judgment creditor in his own behalf only, yet where the court refers the matter to a commissioner to convene lienors and ascertain the amount and priority of their liens, the suit becomes one for the benefit of all creditors presenting liens. The necessity of a reference before a decree of sale is discussed infra § 76.

Report. To warrant a commissioner to report liens on the debtor's property, he must have legal proof thereof, and of the amount remaining due thereon at the time of the report.²⁶ Where a cause is referred to a commissioner to audit judgment liens against a debtor, and after the original report is filed, and at the request of plaintiff's attorney, the commissioner files a supplemental report auditing other judgments since recovered, and all the necessary parties are brought before the court before the hearing of such reports, and opportunity being had, no exceptions are filed to either the original or the supplemental report, it is proper to hear the cause on such supplemental as well as the original report.²⁷ Where a lien allowed is not claimed by any pleading, the commissioner's report should show that claimant or hold-

Liability to account

In creditors' suit to cancel deed executed by debtor to defendant, auditor's finding that plaintiffs and interveners were entitled to an accounting by defendant for money coming into his hands by the operation of certain property was subject to exceptions as contrary to law.—Owen v. S. P. Richards Paper Co., supra.

Priorities

In general creditors' suit, no priority will be given lien acquired after entry of order referring cause to commissioner to convene creditors and report debts of insolvent debtor, since the order of reference suspended all other pending suits.—Dixon v. Hesper Coal & Coke Co., 130 S.E. 663, 100 W.Va. 422.

Insufficient proof

Transcripts of judgments lodged with commissioner to whom creditors' suit has been referred, without further evidence, will not constitute sufficient proof of amounts remaining due thereon to warrant reporting liens on debtor's property.—Blumberg Bros. Co. v. King, supra.

er thereof appeared and proved it.²⁸ A special master appointed for the purpose of enlightening the court, so that proper judicial action may be taken, may make a report recommending future proceedings against defendant trustees;²⁹ and while such report is in no sense a pleading, it is a matter of public record on the files of the court, and all parties to the suit are chargeable with knowledge of its contents, certainly after an order of notice has been made.³⁰ On the filing of a report and after the usual time for excepting,³¹ it may be submitted for ratification, and when ratified all parties are concluded thereby and the litigation is at an end.³² A master's duty in a creditors' suit is discharged when, having acted in so far as possible in conformity with the court's decree, he reports to the court and asks further instructions.³³

The defendant may be required to appear for examination before a master or commissioner.

Where the order appointing a receiver in a creditors' suit based on an unsatisfied execution directs a circuit court commissioner to issue, on request, a summons requiring defendant to appear for examination, a copy of which order is before the commissioner, it is sufficient to authorize him to issue the summons, and he need not have before him proof of service of the order on defendant.³⁴ Irregularity in the appointment of a receiver under a judgment creditor's bill is no ground for defendant's objecting to submit to an examination concerning his property and effects.³⁵ The fact that defendant's answer on oath is waived is no objection to an order for his examination on oath before a master.³⁶ Although defendant has filed a full answer, he must reply to interrogatories in regard to his property.³⁷ The order of reference should direct that complainant have leave to examine defendant or any other person on oath before the master for any of the purposes of the reference, and to compel the production of such books and papers as the master may deem necessary.³⁸ It is erroneous to direct defendant to be examined in relation to any matters other than those charged in the bill, except where an examination is intended as a substitute for an answer in cases where defendant has given a stipulation to that effect.³⁹ The examination is not confined to defendant's property or effects, but extends to any matter which he would be required to disclose by answer, and authorizes the examination of witnesses on any matter charged in the bill and not admitted by defendant on his examination before the master.⁴⁰ A defendant's evidence may properly be received by the master in reference to the true value, quantity, and condition of the property,⁴¹ and he should be given an opportunity to show payment or set-offs to which he may be entitled.⁴² The debtor cannot be examined as to the title of property assigned and delivered to the receiver and sold by him.⁴³ A refusal to allow the judgment debtor to examine the witnesses produced renders their evidence inadmissible against him.⁴⁴ Where a debtor has once gone through an examination, he cannot be compelled to submit to another;⁴⁵ in such case, the master has no power to issue a new summons to compel him to attend for a further examination without a new order of court.⁴⁶ Where defendant has once been sworn before the master to answer as to his property, which is to be delivered to the receiver, it is not necessary or proper to swear him a second time on an adjourned examination, but complainant should proceed to examine him further on the oath already taken.⁴⁷ The examination should proceed with reasonable diligence, and the master cannot adjourn it indefinitely without defendant's consent.⁴⁸

§ 75. Relief Awarded

- a. In general
- b. Conformity to pleadings and proof
- c. Decree for accounting
- d. Personal decree or judgment

a. In General

On a creditors' bill, the court should award such relief as the parties are equitably entitled to, and may retain jurisdiction in order to give complete relief.

A court of equity, having acquired jurisdiction of a creditors' suit, may, under proper circumstances, retain such jurisdiction in order to administer complete relief.⁴⁹ The decree should settle all questions involved,⁵⁰ even to the adjustment of merely legal rights;⁵¹ but it should not seek to adjust the rights of the debtor and third persons further than is necessary to the preservation of the rights of creditors interested in the litigation.⁵²

In a statutory proceeding to reach property or assets which cannot be attached or taken on execution, any relief appropriate under general equitable principles may be granted;⁵³ and in such proceeding the court may order the debtor to assign his interest in a judgment and execution against a third person.⁵⁴

It is not error to enter judgment for the full amount or value of the judgment debtors' property found to be in defendant's hands;⁵⁵ and the rights of a complainant are not affected by an agreement, on the conveyance of homestead property, whereby money was to be held in escrow for defendant subject to the judgment lien; and hence a clause of the decree is correct which orders the holders of such money who tendered it into court to pay it to complainant.⁵⁶ The owner of a judgment against the grantor in a deed absolute on its face, but in reality a mortgage, may in an action in aid of his execution have the deed declared a mortgage.⁵⁷ On bill for the satisfaction of a judgment at law, obtained against a husband for fraudulent representations in the sale of land, a decree for plaintiff against the defendant wife having title thereto, enjoining her from foreclosing or assigning the mortgage and notes held by her until the decree should be paid, provides adequate security for payment, where the amount of the notes exceeds the amount of the decree.⁵⁸ An order directing the substitution of a receiver, appointed for insured in a judgment creditors' suit against him, for the beneficiary named in the policies, without notice to such beneficiary or to the insurance companies, was erroneous, where neither the creditors' bill nor the petition of the receiver for such order showed that the insured debtor had any interest in the policies;⁵⁹ and his severe illness did not present an emergency requiring the substitution of beneficiary before insured's death.⁶⁰

Other cases in which the right to a decree for particular relief has been determined will be found in the notes.⁶¹

Relief awarded

Where, after suit under statute to subject judgment debtor's equity of redemption in land, sold to state for taxes, to payment of judgment lien, was matured for hearing, plaintiff, who also attacked judgment debtor's release of future rentals due under long-term lease, had execution issued which was returned with indorsement of no property found, matter raised by attack on release was properly considered in suit, since necessary parties were before court and issues involved were same, and plaintiff would not be required to institute a new suit under another statute governing enforcement of execution liens.—Shipley v. Browning, supra.

61. Relief held warranted

(1) Where a trust company held money sought to be reached and applied in payment of the owner's debts, under the statute, subject to the payment of all charges, compensation and expenses, and a lien therefor on the owner's interest, the trust company was entitled to award for charges, etc., until date of decree.—

The question of liens and priorities is discussed infra §§ 84-87.

b. Conformity to Pleadings and Proof

The relief given must be warranted by the pleadings and proof.

The relief awarded must be warranted by the pleadings of the party in whose favor the decree is rendered, and the evidence produced, and relief should not be allowed complainant on a theory different from that on which the bill proceeds.⁶² Although the specific prayers for relief are defective, complainant will, under the prayer for general relief, be awarded such relief as is consistent with the case made out by his bill and within the issues,⁶³ even though such relief is inconsistent with the specific relief prayed for, if consistent with the case made by the bill.⁶⁴ However, a prayer for general relief will not warrant the court to grant relief against a party as to whom no averment is made and no special relief is asked; general relief can be given against those only as to whom special relief is sought.⁶⁵

c. Decree for Accounting

A decree for an accounting may be made in a proper case.

A judgment creditor of a mortgagor in a proper case for equitable relief has the same right to an account for rents and profits as the mortgagor, where the mortgagee has used and occupied the premises.⁶⁶ Where judgment creditors of a bankrupt debtor file a bill against the administrator and heirs of the debtor's surety to subject the surety's land to the payment of the debts, and other creditors are admitted by petition, plaintiffs are entitled to a decree for an account of debts.⁶⁷ In a suit by a judgment creditor of a

(2) Since realty subject to constructive trust in favor of purchaser who paid consideration but took title in third person's name constitutes purchaser's "assets" within statute relating to property liable for debts, court of equity had power to grant relief to person subsequently obtaining personal injury judgment against purchaser either by appointing receiver to collect rents of such realty or by impressing lien thereon.—Duncan v. Laury, 292 N.Y.S. 138, 249 App.Div. 314.

(3) In a suit in equity to enforce a personal decree in a former suit by establishing a beneficial ownership of the debtors in certain land claimed by them to have been held in trust under a deed in which no beneficiaries were named, and which they conveyed to their alleged cestuis que trust immediately prior to the rendition of the decree, the conveyance should be allowed to stand as to the cestuis que trust, irrespective of the question whether the deed in trust authorized it to be made, where their interests were acquired in good faith and prior to the commencement of the former suit against the trustee.—Merrillat v. Hensey, 84 App.D.C. 398.

Relief held unwarranted

(1) Where plaintiff, suing for breach of warranty, recovered attorney's fees and expenses, but brought no suit against defendant's grantor for his breach of warranty, he was not entitled in an action against such grantor to enforce his judgment obtained in the other suit, to recover such attorney's fees and expenses.—Asher v. Pioneer Coal Co., 283 S.W. 954, 214 Ky. 505.

(2) In creditors' suit under Rev.L. c 159 § 3 cl 7, as amended by St. 1902 c 544 § 23, and St.1910 c 531 § 2, to restrain A, defendant, from collecting judgment for tort against plaintiff and B, another defendant, pending termination of plaintiff's suit against defendant for breach of contract, court has no jurisdiction to determine plaintiff was secondarily liable on A's judgment, or entitled to subrogation.—Stone, Timlow & Co. v. Stryker, 119 N.E. 655, 230 Mass. 67.

(3) Where a son cultivated the lands of his mother under an agreement with her that he was to receive a certain portion of the crops as between the son and the estate of the mother, it was error in a creditors' suit by him against his mother's estate to charge him for the rental value of the lands after the mother's death without giving him an opportunity to show what taxes and other proper charges he was entitled to have set off against the use of the land.—Burwell v. Burwell, 49 S.E. 68, 103 Va. 314.

Where creditor has taken possession of and sold security for debt

(1) In creditor's suit for balance of debt secured by bill of sale, where creditor has exercised right given by bill to take possession of security and sell security at private sale as debtor's agent, creditor cannot recover in any amount until he has met burden of showing disposition of security as debtor's agent under terms of contract and amount realized thereby, and can then recover only difference between debt and amount realized, provided debt exceeds amount realized.—Goldin v. Federal

Intermediate Credit Bank, 179 S.E. 291, 50 Ga.App. 790.

(2) Creditor, who had refused to permit debtor to dispose of cotton and pay off debt, but required debtor, under authority of bill of sale to cotton to secure debt, to turn cotton over to third person to be sold at best price obtainable, could not recover any of claimed balance due without showing when cotton was sold by third person, whether best price obtainable was realized, amount of cotton sold and amount realized, disposition of proceeds, and exercise of ordinary diligence in disposition of cotton.—*Goldin v. contractor to enforce his judgment against the fund received under the contract, where the contractor and two other claimants to a share in the profits appear and consent to the appointment of a receiver to distribute the fund, the rights of all the claimants should be settled in that proceeding by an accounting.⁶⁸ Where receivers were appointed to take charge of the rents and profits of the land involved, defendant, on denial of plaintiff's claim, is entitled to an accounting of rents and profits taken by the receivers.⁶⁹

d. Personal Decree or Judgment

A personal decree or judgment may, under some circumstances, be rendered against defendant; but not under others.

A court of equity may adapt its relief to the exigencies of the case, and may, when that is all the relief needed, order a sum of money to be paid plaintiff, and give him a personal judgment therefor.⁷⁰ However, in an equity proceeding based on a judgment at law and return of "No property," it is error to render another personal judgment;⁷¹ and where on a creditors' bill against two defendants, one of whom is an absentee, it appears that the one within the jurisdiction is not indebted to the absentee but has received property from him subject to his debts, a personal decree should not be rendered against defendant within the jurisdiction, except for so much of the property as he may have consumed or appropriated to his own use, so that it cannot be forthcoming, or for the profits which he may have received.⁷² Where the judgment on which a creditor's suit is based is void, and hence not a lien on the debtor's land, the court is without jurisdiction to enter a personal judgment against the debtor, even though the debt is admitted to be due.⁷³

§ 76. Decree or Judgment

- a. In general
- b. Decree for sale of property
- c. Effect of decree

a. In General

The decree must conform to the pleadings and proof. It may be rendered in favor of a receiver instead of the complainant, and may be set aside on sufficient grounds.

The judgment or decree must conform to the pleadings and proof.⁷⁴ However, a creditors' bill, charging that defendants hold property in trust for the debtor, or in which he has some equity of redemption or other valuable interest, is sufficient to sustain a finding in the decree that he is the equitable owner of the property;⁷⁵ and the fact that plaintiff sets forth in the complaint that the action is brought on behalf of himself and of all judgment creditors who shall in due time come in and seek relief by, and contribute to, the expenses of the suit does not prevent a judgment in favor of plaintiff alone, where no creditors come in.⁷⁶ The rule that unless all the complainants can recover none can has no application to a creditors' bill filed by a number of creditors of a common debtor.⁷⁷ A decree may be rendered in favor of a receiver rather than complainant, as it vests no title in him, but keeps the property in the custody of the law.⁷⁸ A specific application for a decree establishing as legal and subject to the creditor's claim the title to land awarded to the debtor by a partition agreement, was unnecessary, where the cotenants were all parties to the creditor's bill, and by their verified answers admitted the partition agreement.⁷⁹ Where a finding in a creditors' suit is such as to destroy any equitable features in the case, a decree dismissing the bill is required.⁸⁰ Under a stat-

In creditors' suit to cancel deed executed by debtor to defendant, sustaining defendant's exception that the deed in question was void because of its procurement by an attorney acting in dual capacity of agent for both purchaser and seller was proper, where issue of dual agency was not raised by pleading and deed was not attacked on such ground.—*Owen v. For the reason that the court's action on faith of the admissions would fix the status of the legal title, so that a decree condemning a portion of the land to be sold to satisfy the creditor's claim would operate to vest in the purchaser the legal, as well as the equitable, title as effectually as though the partition had been evidenced by a conveyance of the land in due form to him, or affirmatively declared by the court.—Griffith v. First Nat. Bank, supra.

80. Mass.—Westfield Sav. Bank v. Leahey, 197 N.E. 160.

ute authorizing a suit in equity to subject property to the payment of plaintiff's judgment after a return of execution "no property found," it is error to give plaintiff a judgment for his debt, he having one judgment which he is seeking to collect.⁸¹

Setting aside decree. When the absence of necessary parties is brought to the court's attention after decree, it should set aside the decree and require amendment of the bill bringing in absent trustees under deeds of trust, giving them an opportunity to prove and have decreed their deeds and liens in order of priority.⁸²

Default. Although a bill to reach and apply property to payment of a debt is sometimes said to be in the nature of an equitable trustee process, the normal effect of a default is not the same as in trustee process, where the trustee by common practice is permitted to make his defense on scire facias,⁸³ but a decree, taking the bill as confessed, on failure of defendant to appear or answer, may be vacated and defendant allowed to make his defense on the merits.⁸⁴

b. Decree for Sale of Property

- (1) Necessity and propriety in general
- (2) Sufficiency of rents to pay debts
- (3) Requisites of decree

(1) Necessity and Propriety in General

The court may direct a sale of the debtor's property to satisfy the judgment or decree. The entry of a decree of sale before material issues have been disposed of, is premature. In some states, a sale may be ordered pending a motion for a new trial.

The usual methods by which choses in action and equitable rights of the judgment debtor are subjected to the payment of complainant's judgment are by directing the sale of such property itself and the application of the proceeds to the payment of the judgment,⁸⁵ or by compelling an assignment to a receiver with power on his part to take such proceedings in the appropriate tribunal as may be necessary to reduce the same to his possession, as stated supra § 63. No sale should be ordered, however, where there is an adequate legal remedy.⁸⁶ A sale may be ordered by the court in a general creditors' suit, although the creditor instituting the same has parte' with his interest.⁸⁷ A decree for the sale of land to satisfy a judgment is properly refused where the judgment debtor had no equity in the land which could be subjected.⁸⁸ A decree subjecting the debtor's property to the creditor's judgment is not erroneous for failure to direct a sale, where the decree reserved leave to plaintiff to apply for such further orders as would carry the decree into effect.⁸⁹ A decree directing satisfaction of a judgment out of a sale of property to be discovered is not prejudicial to defendant, as there can be no satisfaction of the judgment until something is discovered.⁹⁰

Time of rendition or entry. The entry of a decree of sale before material issues raised by the pleadings have been decided, is premature.⁹¹ In some states, a sale may be ordered pending a motion for a new trial.⁹²

(2) Sufficiency of Rents to Pay Debts

Under some statutes, a sale of land can be ordered when and only when it is made to appear that the rents and profits for a period of five years will be insufficient to satisfy the claims.

Under the statutes of some states, the court has no power to order a sale of real estate, unless it be made to appear that the rents and profits therefrom for a period of five years will be insufficient to satisfy the claims.⁹³ It is ordinarily the duty of the court to ascertain this fact by reference

Nature of finding requiring dismissal

In bank's suit to apply guarantors' alleged deposits on debt created by guaranty, finding that deposits belonged to parties whose names had been subsequently added to accounts as joint depositors destroyed equitable features in case and required decree dismissing bill, leaving plaintiff to pursue at law any remaining rights, unless there had been waiver of want of equity jurisdiction, permitting decrees against principal debtors.—*Westfield Sav. to a commissioner, or by an express finding of its own based on the pleadings and evidence,⁹⁴ and if such fact is shown the court will decree a sale.⁹⁵ This statute may be waived by the debtor.⁹⁶ It has been held that a decree to rent land made in a creditors' proceeding is no objection to a subsequent decree of sale in a suit to enforce a prior lien, the creditors to the former suit being parties;⁹⁷ and that where none of the decrees for renting has been executed, and the real estate would not in five years rent for enough to discharge the liens, a decree annulling them, and directing the sale of so much of the property as may be necessary, is proper.⁹⁸

(3) Requisites of Decree

- (a) In general
- (b) Ascertainment of amount of liens and priorities
- (c) Ascertainment of amounts, parcels, or interest to be sold

(a) In General

In decreeing a sale, the court should ascertain and protect the rights of all parties. A decree of sale from which no appeal is taken is conclusive until vacated.

In decreeing a sale, the court should ascertain and protect the rights of all the parties,⁹⁹ and also the rights of a tenant in possession under a lease executed before the judgment.¹ A decree of sale is not invalid because it does not set forth with accuracy and definiteness the indebtedness for which the land is to be sold.² Where defendants do not answer, the court may, although no decree pro confesso is entered, define the rights of plaintiff, and under the master's report direct him to sell the property at a price named, and, on his further report that such price cannot be obtained order him to sell at public auction, with full directions for the protection and settlement of the rights of the parties.³ Where the court has jurisdiction both of a creditors' suit to reach and to apply property of the debtor and of the parties, a decree of sale from which no appeal is taken is conclusive until vacated by the trial court, even if erroneous or inadvertently entered; and defendants cannot attack it in subsequent proceedings in the cause.⁴

(b) Ascertainment of Amount of Liens and Priorities

The decree should ascertain and state the amount of liens and their priority; and for this purpose a reference to the commissioners is generally required. A decree based on the report of a commissioner will be set aside where such report did not show the value of the property or the liens or indebtedness.

A decree subjecting property to the satisfaction of a judgment and ordering a sale thereof must ascertain and state the precise amount for which it is liable,⁵ should ascertain with certainty the name of each lienor and the character of the lien,⁶ and should also determine the priority of the liens.⁷ Error in this respect may, however, be waived by the debtor by failure to object until after the decree has been executed and the report of sale made and confirmed and the proceeds of sale directed to be distributed.⁸

Reason for this is that a decree of sale before ascertaining the amount of the liens and their respective priorities has a tendency to sacrifice the property by discouraging the creditors from bidding as they probably would if their right to satisfaction of their debts and the order in which they were to be paid out of the property had been previously ascertained.—Marling v. Robrecht, 13 W.Va. 440.

8. W.Va.—White v. Drew, 9 W.Va. 695.

the cause should be referred to commissioners, and if their report fails to show the debts, their priority, and their amount, the cause should be recommitted so that this may be done;⁹ but the cause will not be referred unless it appears that there are other liens in addition to those appearing in the bill,¹⁰ and where there are only two judgment liens and the pleadings and proof show clearly what they are, a reference is not necessary;¹¹ nor is it necessary, before decreeing that lands be leased to discharge a lien thereon, to refer the cause to have the amounts and priorities of all the liens ascertained and fixed.¹² Where, under a general creditors' suit, a decree is entered for the sale of defendant's lands, and it is subsequently suggested that there are other liens than those audited, a decree referring the cause to a master commissioner for a further accounting should in terms suspend the decree of sale.¹³ Payment of some of the debts included in a decree made on a commissioner's report convening liens in a suit by a judgment creditor for himself and other lienors does not call for a restatement of liens.¹⁴

Setting aside decree made on incomplete report. A decree for the sale of realty, made on the report of a commissioner which did not show the value of the personal property or the liens or indebtedness against the estate, or the date or priorities thereof, so that the court could not determine to what extent it would be necessary to resort to the realty, will be set aside.¹⁵

(c) Ascertainment of Amounts, Parcels, or Interest to Be Sold

The determination of the amount, parcels, or interest to be sold and the order of sale, is ordinarily governed by the rules as to marshaling assets and securities. Where an equity of redemption is sought to be reached, it has been held that the court may decree a sale of the entire property, and that the surplus, after payment of the debt due the mortgagee or pledgee, be applied to the satisfaction of complainant's claim; but there is contrary authority.

The general rules as to the marshaling of assets and securities, as laid down in the title Marshal-

ing Assets and Securities, are applicable in determining the parcels to be sold and the order of sale in creditors' suits.¹⁶ If it does not appear with reasonable certainty that the land first liable will be sufficient to discharge the lien, the decree may direct a sale of all the land in the order in which it is liable until enough is realized to pay off the judgment and costs.¹⁷ On a bill by a judgment creditor to subject the lands of his debtors to satisfy a judgment obtained against them as maker and indorsers of a note, whose liabilities inter sese are successive, it is error to decree a sale of the lands of the last indorser before resorting to the lands of the maker and prior indorsers, unless to require plaintiff to exhaust the estates of those debtors whose liability is prior to the last indorser, will, in the opinion of the court, unduly delay plaintiff in the collection of his debt.¹⁸ In a proceeding to reach an equity of redemption, it has been held, the entire property may be sold and the surplus after payment of the debt due to the mortgagee or pledgee applied to the satisfaction of complainant's claim;¹⁹ but there is authority to the contrary.²⁰ Where property in the hands of a receiver is more than sufficient to pay all debts, he will be restrained from selling the whole.²¹ So, on a bill to subject a contingent interest of a debtor in land to the claims of judgment creditors, if the debts are small, the debtor's interest should be protected by directing the commissioner first to offer for sale a fraction of the debtor's contingent interest in each lot.²² It has also been held that on a bill against a debtor who has escaped after civil arrest and the debtor's alienee, to subject lands devised to the debtor after his escape and conveyed by him while at large, equity will decree a sale of so much of the land as is liable to an elegit lien, if it appears that the profits are insufficient to keep down the interest of the debt, but will not decree a sale of the whole of the lands.²³ Where, in a suit by a general creditor to subject to payment of his debt the debtor's interest in land held in secret trust by his joint owner, it appears that the joint owner, holding the legal title, has created a lien on the land superior to plaintiff's claim, only the debtor's equity of redemption in his moiety can be sold, it being error to direct a sale of the entire interest in the land;²⁴ and this is so even though the joint owner may be a coobligor, jointly and equally liable for the discharge of the superior lien, unless the debt constituting the superior lien covering such interest is due, and payment thereof is demanded by the creditor.²⁵ The debtor's land on which an unmatured mortgage debt constitutes a first lien should ordinarily be directed to be sold subject to the mortgage.²⁶ The court may in a proper case decree the sale of certain parcels of the real estate involved or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the judgment, and reserve jurisdiction of the cause and the parties for such further proceedings as to the balance of the property as justice may require.²⁷

The decree of sale should show what property or interest is to be sold;²⁸ but a decree directing the sale of a judgment debtor's equitable interest in realty encumbered by trust deeds is not invalid for failure to specify what is to be sold, since the debtor's interest ordinarily is that left over after satisfaction of the trust deeds.²⁹ In a suit to subject a decedent's realty to the payment of a judgment, the court properly sustained the report of a commissioner of sale which was sufficiently clear to show that the judgment was a lien on the realty, and that there was no personalty to pay the debt.³⁰ Where the bill and proceedings specify the land, a decree for the sale of the land in the bill and proceedings mentioned, or so much as may satisfy the purposes of the decree, is sufficiently certain.³¹ Before making the decree of sale, it is not necessary to ascertain the value of the land.³² It is error for the commissioner appointed in a creditors' suit to return the debtor's property at his own valuation;³³ but where such valuation is not disputed, and other evidence tends to show that it is correct, exceptions to the report are properly overruled.³⁴

c. Effect of Decree

The decree binds all creditors coming in after the institution of the suit. A decree of sale establishes the validity of complainant's as against such creditors as well as against the debtor. A decree for an account suspends all other pending suits of creditors who come in under the decree. Purchasers pendente lite are bound.

All creditors coming in after the institution of a creditors' suit are bound by the decree.³⁵ A decree of sale establishes complainant's claim as legal and valid,³⁶ unless it is otherwise declared in the decree;³⁷ and prevents the running of the statute of limitations against a claim as a simple contract debt.³⁸ The claim is established as valid, not only as against the debtor, but as against all creditors coming in to claim distribution.³⁹ A decree for an account operates to suspend all other pending suits of creditors who come in under the decree.⁴⁰

For whose benefit presumed

A decree for the sale of property in a general creditors' suit, in which all claims have been audited, is presumed to be for the benefit of all creditors, and not for complainant's benefit alone.—Haskin Wood Vulcanizing Co. v. Cleveland Ship-Building Co., 26 S.E. 878, 94 Va. 439.

41. Colo.—Shuck v. Quackenbush, 227 P. 1041, 75 Colo. 592, 38 A.L.R. 259.

a. In General

The complainant cannot, after decree, bring in any new or additional claim. A defendant may, after decree, come in as a creditor. Creditors other than the complainant are entitled to come in and prove their claims under a general decree, and may resist the allowance of other claims. Before distribution, all creditors should be called in by appropriate notice.

The rights of complainant under the decree are limited to the claim set forth in the bill; he cannot after decree bring in any new or additional claim,⁴² and where he recovers another judgment after filing his bill, he cannot come in and receive the benefit of the decree with respect to the second judgment, against defendant's objection.⁴³ A defendant to a creditors' bill, although he does not in his answer distinctly allege himself to be a creditor, and although he asks in his answer to be dismissed with costs, may still after decree come in on the fund as a creditor.⁴⁴ Creditors other than complainant, even though they are not mentioned in the bill, are entitled to come in and prove their claims under a general decree,⁴⁵ although where a fund can be divided satisfactorily only by dividing it among a certain class of persons, it is necessary so to frame the decree that all those persons may be brought in for their distributive shares.⁴⁶ Creditors who file a petition electing to come in under the decree that may be made on a pending creditors' bill have a full standing as creditors, entitled to prove under the decree when made.⁴⁷ Where several bills are instituted by different creditors, and all are stayed but one, all the creditors should be allowed to come in under the decree in that suit.⁴⁸ Where a bill is referred to a commissioner or master to ascertain the liens and their priorities, any creditor may present his claim, and if it is allowed, he has the right to have it passed on by the court without formal pleadings;⁴⁹ and a creditors' bill inures to the benefit of all creditors who present and prove

The creditors whose claims have been recognized or established in any of the modes pointed out by the decree become quasi parties to the litigation,⁵¹ and are entitled to notice of application made in the cause,⁵² and may resist the allowance of any claim of equal or greater dignity than their own,⁵³ as by interposing the statute of limitations as a bar to the claims of other creditors.⁵⁴ They cannot, however, question the rights of any other creditors after settlement on an issue between the proper parties; the rights of such other creditors remain undisturbed except in so far as a proportionate abatement is concerned by reason of the additional claims.⁵⁵ Before distribution under a creditors' bill, all creditors should be called in by publication or some appropriate notice, so as to afford them an opportunity to present their claims;⁵⁶ and this is so in some states even where the suit is instituted by complainant in his own behalf alone.⁵⁷

b. Time for Presentation

The court may limit the time for presentation of claims, but such limitation will not be enforced strictly, unless injustice would otherwise result.

The court may direct an interlocutory judgment requiring other judgment creditors to prove their claims within the time limited, and may allow a reasonable time to reduce other claims to judgment, rendering final judgment for the division of the fund among judgment creditors entitled thereto where the allotted time shall have elapsed.⁵⁸ Although an order requiring creditors to file their claims within a reasonable time fixed, or be forever barred, has been held valid and effective,⁵⁹ it has also been held that creditors are not held strictly to the time unless injustice would otherwise be done thereby to the parties;⁶⁰ that such an order is primarily intended for safety in distribution, and not as a forfeiture of the rights of dilatory creditors;⁶¹ and that a refusal to permit the filing of a claim after the time fixed in the order must be based on some prejudice arising, not from the claim itself, but from delay in prosecuting it.⁶²

c. Proof and Allowance

A creditor coming in under the decree must prove his claim if its validity is denied. Where an audit is confirmed by the court, it may order the payment of the claims allowed. An order fixing the amount of a claim may be set aside for cause. Interest on a claim may be allowed.

In a general creditors' proceeding, creditors may informally present their claims, and, after a more or less formal hearing, the chancellor determines, on the entire record and all the facts before him, the rights of the various creditors as against the fund for distribution and as between themselves.⁶³ A person coming in under the decree and presenting a claim must establish the same by full proof before the master or commissioner,⁶⁴ and if any party interested denies its validity,⁶⁵ and if he fails to prove a valid claim, it will be disallowed.⁶⁶ If defendant is insolvent, the insolvent schedule or his voluntary admission is sufficient proof of the claim of a creditor who afterward comes in to participate in the fund;⁶⁷ but where other creditors come in after decree and the insolvent denies the debt, or there is a discrepancy between the claim and his admissions, full proof is required.⁶⁸ Where an audit is confirmed by a court of equity, the approved practice is also to pass an order to pay the claims which were thereby allowed; but the judgment of the court is effectually pronounced on a claim by confirming the auditor's report, if no steps are taken to revoke or overrule it.⁶⁹ An order fixing the amount of a claim is interlocutory and may be set aside for good cause shown at any time before the close of the term in which final decree is entered.⁷⁰

Interest on claim. Where a special master fails to fix a date for the application of certain funds to the payment of bonds, as required by the decree, interest is allowable on the amount to the date of actual payment.⁷¹

d. Effect of Failure to Present or Prove

A creditor who is given an opportunity to come in and prove his claim, but who fails to do so, cannot share in the distribution.

Erroneous refusal to permit filing after time fixed

Refusal to permit creditor to file claim against receivers appointed in creditors' suit for sequestration, nearly a year and half after expiration of time fixed by decree for filing of such claims, was error, where only objections made were that allowance of claim would swell the total amount of the claims and might prevent reorganization in near future.—Employers' Liability Assur. Corporation v. Astoria Mahogany Co., supra.

decree recognizing him as a creditor.⁷³ However, where a creditor's judgment is a lien on two separate tracts of land, his failure to present his claim in a suit to subject one of those tracts does not preclude him from proving it in a subsequent suit to subject the other.⁷⁴

§ 79. Execution and Enforcement of Decree or Judgment in General

In a general creditors' suit plaintiff cannot, after judgment and the appointment of a receiver to collect and apply the debtor's assets, issue execution on the judgment. Where, in a suit against a trustee to reach the trust estate or the income thereof, the judgment fixes the amount of the surplus income and directs the plaintiff's debt to be paid therefrom, execution may issue against the trustee's property on his failure to comply with such order.

In a creditors' suit brought by plaintiff in behalf of himself and others who may come in, plaintiff cannot, after judgment and the appointment of a receiver to collect the debtor's assets and apply them to the payment of the debts, issue execution on the judgment; the receiver alone can enforce the judgment.⁷⁶ When a judgment in a creditors' suit brought against a trustee to reach the trust estate or the income thereof, fixed the amount of the surplus income and directed plaintiff's debt to be paid therefrom, it was proper to order the issuance of an execution against the property of the trustee on his failure to comply with the judgment, a copy of which had been served on him and his attorneys.⁷⁷

§ 80. Sales and Conveyances under Order of Court

The rules governing judicial sales generally are applicable to sales under decrees in creditors' suits, with respect to the conduct of the sale, the rights and liabilities of bidders and purchasers, ground for objecting to or setting aside a confirmation of the sale, etc.

The general principles relating to execution sales, judicial sales, and sales by receivers are discussed in the C.J.S. title Executions § 196 et seq, also 28 C.J. p 615 note 43 et seq.; the C.J.S. title Judicial Sales § 1 et seq, also 35 C.J. p 7 note 1 et seq; and the C.J.S. title Receivers § 220 et seq, also 53 C.J. p 203 note 36 et seq.

On a decree for complainant the sale may or should be conducted, according to the practice in the various jurisdictions, by the master or commissioner,⁷⁸ by a receiver appointed in the suit,⁷⁹ or by the sheriff.⁸⁰ Although the appointment of a commissioner to make the sale is within the sound discretion of the court,⁸¹ it is the practice to heed the requests of the creditors in making the appointment.⁸² Plaintiff's attorney may properly be made a co-commissioner or special commissioner where it appears that the sale will produce a surplus over the indebtedness,⁸³ but it is the general practice not to appoint the debtor's attorney as sole commissioner;⁸⁴ nor, it has been held, is defendant entitled to have his own attorney appointed as co-special commissioner to protect his interests at the sale.⁸⁵

Rights and liabilities of purchaser in general. A purchaser at the sale under a decree in a general creditor's suit becomes a party to the suit;⁸⁶ and if the decree and commissioner's deed embrace all the property which the purchaser claims to have purchased, he may apply to the court in such proceeding for correction or relief, but cannot not obtain the same in a separate suit.⁸⁷ Where the interest of a purchaser began with his bid, he cannot rightly complain of orders made before his rights accrued.⁸⁸ Where a debtor in a creditors' bill, filed to reach his interest under a title bond, alleged a transfer of the bond as security, prior to the suit, to one who was not made a party, the transferee was not bound by a decree declaring the interest in the bond to be in the debtor, and ordering a sale, and could not maintain a bill to be relieved from such decree.⁸⁹ Where a decree directed the renting of the land and the application of the rent to discharge the indebtedness, the liability of sureties on the rental bond with knowledge that, on the tenant's default and the sale of the land, they would be liable for the difference between the sale price and the amount of lien indebtedness, arises and becomes enforceable in case of a deficiency.⁹⁰

Manner of making sale; bids. The order in which separate parcels or interests should be sold is considered supra § 76 b (3) (c). Where the master reports that he cannot obtain the price at which he was directed to sell, the court may order him to sell at public auction.⁹¹ It is not error to decree a sale of land for cash where a trust deed given thereon to secure a debt then past due, and which is prior to the judgments, authorizes the trustee to sell for cash.⁹² The proper rule for the court, in directing a sale of real estate in a creditors' suit, is to direct, in the decree ordering the sale, that the cash payment shall be retained by the commissioner making the sale, or be paid into bank to the credit of the suit, subject to the future order of the court; the money, being thus under the control of the court, will, on the confirmation of the report or on the setting aside of the sale, be disposed of in the way that shall then seem proper.⁹³ Where the successful bidder at the sale, makes a deposit and then refuses to pay the purchase price, the court may accept the bid, confirm the sale to such purchaser, and take steps to hold him to his contract of purchase,⁹⁴ or the court may reject the bid and refuse to confirm the sale, in which case the purchaser is released from any obligation to comply with his bid, and cannot thereafter be proceeded against;⁹⁵ and, on refusal to confirm the sale, the court cannot properly accept a private bid which was substantially less than the highest bid, but should readvertise the property for sale at public auction in order to bring the highest price possible.⁹⁶ Where, after a junior judgment creditor had made a bid on property sold in his creditors' suit against the debtor, senior judgment creditors, with liens properly recorded, intervened and demanded participation in the proceeds, the fact that their claims were unknown to the junior creditor was not such a mistake as entitled the latter to be relieved of his bid.⁹⁷ The debtor cannot complain that the bidding at the sale was chilled by failure of the court to join trustees, who held the legal title to the property as security for bonds, as parties before the sale, where the purchaser paid twice the upset price for the property covered by the indenture under which the trustees acted, and more than the upset price for the balance of the property, and almost three times the appraisal figure.⁹⁸

Confirmation, setting aside, or stay of sale. A party who is jointly bound for the debts for which land of his codefendant has been sold to satisfy judgment liens may object to the confirmation of the sale, the proceeds of which are sufficient to pay all debts.⁹⁹ Errors of law in a decree and in proceedings leading up to it are not reviewable on objections to the confirmation of a sale thereunder.¹ An order confirming a commissioner's sale in a creditors' suit will be reversed where there is great inadequacy in the price received;² but one who objects to confirmation of a sale to the highest bidder on the ground of gross inadequacy of price, has the burden of proving such inadequacy and unless this is shown, it is error to refuse confirmation.³ Where one who bids at a sale is unable to comply with the terms of sale, and by parol it is agreed that another shall stand in his stead and the sale is confirmed, the confirmation may properly be set aside, as it is not enforceable in a court of equity.⁴ As against a bona fide purchaser, a sale which has been confirmed will not be set aside because of error in decreeing a sale without an account of the amount or priority of debts, if it appears that a sale was necessary;⁵ and where a decree directs the commissioner to sell the land in suit or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the judgment, and a sale is made to a bona fide purchaser and confirmed, if the debtor or his assignee in bankruptcy seeks to set aside the sale on the ground that the price was inadequate or that only a part of the land should have been sold, the burden is on him to show that fact.⁶ A sale by a receiver may be stayed in a proper case;⁷ but where judgment creditors sue for themselves and all other lienholders, payment of some of the debts included in the decree made on the commissioner's report does not suspend execution of the decree of sale.⁸

Conveyance. Where a wife, who was named as grantee in a referee's deed to land purchased by her husband at a foreclosure sale, was made a party to a creditors' suit by a judgment creditor of the husband, and refused to convey the title, as directed by the court, the court properly directed the sheriff to make the conveyance,⁹ but the order was erroneous in directing a conveyance by a full covenant warranty deed, instead of a bargain and sale deed.¹⁰ A decree should not authorize the master to convey title to the purchaser in case defendant elects not to convey his equitable interest to complainant, and a sale is thereby rendered necessary; but where the debtor has appeared and is a resident of the commonwealth, the decree should direct him to make a conveyance to the purchaser in case of sale.¹¹ So, where, in a suit to reach the debtor's interest in a lease containing an option to purchase at a fixed price, a sale of the land is had at a price which satisfies the agreement in the lease, the purchaser is entitled to a conveyance, and where the lessee executes a deed to him but the lessor refuses to do so, the court should enter a final decree, which, on being recorded would vest title in the purchaser.¹² Where the court orders a sale subject to the payment of a lien in a certain sum, and the payment of a further sum to the debtor by way of exemption, a tender by the purchaser of the amount of the lien only does not entitle him to a conveyance.¹³

Redemption. On decreeing a sale of land, the debtor should be given a reasonable time before the sale, in which to redeem the land by paying the debt due on it.¹⁴

§ 81. Distribution among Creditors

The expenses of the sale and taxes due from the debtor must be first paid from the proceeds of the sale; and where there are several creditors, each having claims of the same class, a ratable distribution will be made. Loss of funds arising from the sale will be deducted from the shares of those responsible for the loss.

Where land is sold in a creditors' suit, taxes due from the debtor must be first satisfied from the proceeds.¹⁵ So, all expenses of the sale are to be first paid from the proceeds thereof, and the balance only ratably distributed among the creditors, who are in that way made to contribute in due proportion to defraying the expenses of the suit;¹⁶ where more than one creditor is entitled to payment, each claim is paid according to its dignity, and where there are several creditors, each having claims in the same class, a ratable distribution is made among them;¹⁷ and the rights of creditors having liens by judgment, mortgage, or otherwise, are not disturbed.¹⁸ A wife who gave her personal property to her husband to invest for her may, on his insolvency, if she declines to assert any lien rights to the detriment of other creditors, claim as a general creditor in the distribution of the proceeds of the sale of the insolvent's real and personal property after satisfaction of specific and general liens.¹⁹ Where parties to a creditors' bill unwarrantably occasion a loss to the funds arising from the sale of property by pretended bids, the amounts otherwise due them on the general distribution will be mulcted by the court to protect other creditors from loss on account of their conduct.²⁰ Where a trustee appointed under an agreement with lien creditors pendente lite wrongfully distributes funds collected by him, the ensuing loss should be charged to the creditors and not to the debtor.²¹

The acquisition of a lien by the filing of a creditors' bill, the priorities between lien claimants, the commencement and duration of the lien and the property to which it attaches, are discussed infra §§ 84-87.

§ 82. Appeal and Error

The rules governing appeal and review in civil actions generally apply to creditors' suits.

A decree ascertaining the amounts and priorities of all the debts sought to be established as liens, and ordering the sale of the property for payment of the debts is a final decree from which an appeal will lie;²² and the same is true of an order distributing the proceeds of the sale;²³ but a decree which does not order a sale or payment of complainant's demand has been held to be merely interlocutory.²⁴ In a suit by a creditor to convene the creditors of an insolvent corporation, a creditor whose debt or lien is disallowed may appeal without waiting further action as to debts of the others.²⁵ A judgment creditor who is not made a party to a suit may appeal from an order denying his petition for intervention,²⁶ but an order that, after exhausting their remedy against the principal debtor, creditors may apply for and obtain a judgment against a guarantor of collection is not final, and is therefor not appealable;²⁷ nor is an order denying an application for a bond from plaintiff.²⁸ For the purpose of determining the question of appellate jurisdiction, the amount in dispute is the amount of the judgment plaintiff seeks to enforce, although the fund sought to be reached is greater in amount;²⁹ and where the demands of several creditors joining in the bill exceed the amount necessary to confer jurisdiction, but no individual creditor has a claim sufficient in amount for that purpose, none of the creditors can appeal from a decree dismissing the bill.³⁰ Where the interests of the parties are severable, each party representing a separate interest must take a separate appeal; an appeal by one party defendant does not bring up the case for review as to the other parties not affected by the issues on such appeal.³¹

Presentation and reservation in lower court of grounds for review. The rule that questions not raised and properly preserved for review in the lower court will not be noticed on appeal, stated in Appeal and Error § 228, ordinarily applies in appeals in creditors' suits.³² Thus an objection that complainant had an adequate remedy at law cannot be raised for the first time on appeal.³³ On the other hand, it has been held that such objection is not waived by failure to make it in the trial court,³⁴ and that the failure of the commissioner's report to set out the order of liens on the property sought to be subjected may be taken advantage of for the first time on appeal, where the defect is apparent on the face of the report.³⁵ It has also been held that a judgment creditor is not estopped by failure to except to the ratification of the auditor's allowance to another creditor within the time allowed by an order nisi.³⁶

Record. A decree dismissing a creditors' bill will be affirmed, notwithstanding it is claimed that facts were admitted at the hearing authorizing a recovery, where the record shows no such admissions.³⁸

Review and disposition of cause. Matters not necessary to a decision will not be reviewed.³⁹ The rule stated in Appeal and Error § 1676, that non-prejudicial error is not ground for reversal, applies in creditors' suits.⁴⁰ Where a decree of sale in a creditors' suit, which is erroneous for denial of the preference right of certain of the creditors and for failure to adjust liens, is confirmed without objection before appeal, so much of it as directs the sale will be affirmed, and the decree will be reversed only in so far as it denies the preference right to the prejudice of the complaining creditor.⁴¹ So, where one creditor in an action to recover a preference appeals, but other creditors have not been given an opportunity to establish their status, the cause should be remanded to enable them to do so.⁴² The reviewing court may, in order to obviate an objection made for the first time on appeal that necessary parties were omitted, refuse to dismiss the bill and remand it so that it may be amended as to parties.⁴³ If the property sought to be subjected to a creditors' bill is adjudged not liable to attachment, and complainants' appeal without establishing their debt or attempting to do so, the court, on reversing the decree, will remand the cause in order that the debt may be established,⁴⁴ but where the trial court, after refusing to permit plaintiff to amend the bill so as to show that the judgment on which the suit was based was a judgment of the circuit court, called on both parties for further testimony, and plaintiff thereupon rested, without introducing any proof that defendant had property in hand or due from third persons, or that he had legal title to real estate which he withheld from record, as stated in the bill, whereupon the bill was dismissed, plaintiff is not entitled to a reversal on appeal, although the court erred in refusing leave to amend.⁴⁵ Where, in a suit to enforce judgment liens, appellant, since the appeal, finds proof that one of the judgments had been paid, the propriety of the affirmation of the decree by the appellate court is not thereby affected, but appellant can have relief in the court below.⁴⁶ Where error in the amount of the decree is released the appellate court will not reverse on that account.⁴⁷

§ 83. Costs

- a. Persons entitled to, and liable for, costs
- b. Amount and items taxable

a. Persons Entitled to, and Liable for, Costs

The general principles relating to costs in civil actions are ordinarily applicable to creditors' suits.

Under a statute declaring under what circumstances the costs in the trial court and on appeal shall be within the discretion of the court, the imposition of costs in an action in the nature of a judgment creditors' suit is discretionary.⁴⁸

Complainants. It is a general rule that one jointly interested in a common fund, who brings and prosecutes a suit for its preservation and administration, as in a general creditors' suit, is equitably entitled to reimbursement of his costs.⁴⁹ If complainant fails to find property on his bill he is liable for costs.⁵⁰ So also is a creditor who with knowledge that a decree has been entered in one creditors' suit brings a separate suit.⁵¹ Where the appellate court finds that complainant was not entitled to maintain his creditors' bill, but that the trial court properly rendered judgment in his favor on the indebtedness, all costs beyond those necessarily incurred in obtaining the judgment for the debt should be taxed against complainant.⁵²

Interveners. Parties voluntarily coming into a creditors' suit before any costs have accrued except such as were necessary to the institution and preparation of the suit are liable for all costs,⁵³ and creditors who intervene and have their claims properly proved are entitled to have their necessary costs taxed against the fund sought to be subjected.⁵⁴ However, the retainer of counsel in a creditors' suit, without notice to subsequent intervening creditors, does not give the court jurisdiction to order judgment against the interveners for such attorney's fee without notice or hearing.⁵⁵

Defendants. A defendant debtor of the debtor who admits his liability and is willing to pay the debt is entitled to his costs out of the fund.⁵⁶ If a defendant charged as trustee denies the trust, and the court finds that it exists, he is not entitled to costs out of the fund, but is liable personally therefor;⁵⁷ and the same is true where the court finds that defendant intended to evade a statute relating to transfers of personal property.⁵⁸ A defendant receiver who is successful on his appeal is entitled to the cost thereof.⁵⁹

Necessary costs, including reasonable attorney's fees, are recoverable in creditors' suits.

The rules which govern items taxable as costs, discussed in Costs § 184 et seq, apply in creditors' suits.⁶⁰ Costs necessarily incurred to bring the case to final decree, such as procuring certified copies of deeds and other papers, may be ordered to be paid out of funds in the hands of a special receiver appointed on the application of the judgment debtor, as against the objection of such debtor.⁶¹

Costs of reference. Upon a reference to determine the priorities of the creditors, costs of the parties in attending the reference will not be allowed out of the fund.⁶² The fees of the referee are taxable as costs and payable out of the funds derived from the litigation before distribution.⁶³

Attorney's fees. A plaintiff in a general creditors' bill is entitled to have his attorney's fees taxed,⁶⁴ to be paid either out of the fund itself or by proportionate contribution from those receiving the benefit of the litigation;⁶⁵ and, while such fees should in strictness be allowed only to creditors incurring expenses for the benefit of an entire class,⁶⁶ they may be awarded directly to the attorney, without any application by the client.⁶⁷ The fees allowable to plaintiff's counsel include reasonable compensation for services rendered after the appointment of a receiver in discharge of his duty, acting in behalf of all creditors standing in a position similar to plaintiff to prosecute the suit to final distribution and to defend and otherwise protect

Court should have determined as matter of discretion whether unsecured creditors' attorneys, whose efforts increased assets distributable to general creditors, although not total assets, were entitled to counsel fees.—Nolte v. Hudson Nav. Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 47 F.2d 166.

the fund;⁶⁸ but such fees are to be based only on the fund applicable to claims of creditors of the same class as plaintiff, and the fund on which others have superior liens cannot be subjected to such payment.⁶⁹ It has been held erroneous to decree compensation to an attorney for the preparation of the final decree, payable out of the fund, but counsel fees allowable on other grounds may be so apportioned as to compensate him for such services.⁷⁰ Bondholders who receive no benefit from the services of attorneys for the general creditors should not be required to pay for any part of such services.⁷¹ So creditors represented by their own counsel cannot be compelled to share in expenses incurred in the employment of other counsel by other creditors;⁷² but creditors, although nominally represented by their own counsel, expressly or impliedly consenting to be represented by attorneys for other creditors who alone are active and achieve beneficial results, should contribute proportionately to counsel fee expense.⁷³ Where plaintiff's counsel are also employed by interveners under contracts for special fees, while the general allowance to them, from the fund recovered, of fees for their services in recovering the same is not to be diminished by the total of the special fees, the amount of the claims of the separate clients from whom counsel receive special compensation is to be taken into consideration by way of a general deduction in determining the total fund on the basis of which their fees should be fixed.⁷⁴ A creditor who collects funds of a debtor for the joint benefit of himself and other creditors should be allowed reasonable compensation for the services of his attorney,⁷⁵ at least to the extent that they are beneficial.⁷⁶ However, counsel are entitled only to their reasonable and necessary disbursements;⁷⁷ and such allowance is not chargeable to any surplus otherwise payable to the debtor.⁷⁸ If an allowance beyond the usual fee for counsel is proper, and it is paid out of the proceeds, it should be credited ratably on the liens, so as not to tax the debtor with it.⁷⁹

§ 84. Liens and Priorities

- a. In general
- b. Where fund is in court or is trust fund for all creditors
- c. Where bill is brought in behalf of all creditors

a. In General

As a general rule a creditor who brings a creditors' bill to reach equitable assets of the debtor acquires a lien, and is entitled to the satisfaction of his claim out of such assets in preference to other creditors. The bill must point out the specific property sought to be reached.

Judgments are not in equity liens on equitable assets of the debtor prior to the filing of a bill to subject them.⁸⁰ A judgment creditor, having no lien on the debtor's unassigned dower interest in land at the time of filing his petition for payment to petitioner of the sum awarded the debtor in lieu of dower from the proceeds of a consent sale of the land, could not obtain a lien on such sum by intervening in a creditors' suit.⁸¹

The principle is well established that, where a creditor by his superior diligence discovers and uncovers property which could not be seized on execution at law, and properly proceeds by a creditors' bill in his own right to subject such property to the satisfaction of his judgment, he acquires a lien on such property,⁸² whether the debt is evidenced by simple contract or by judgment,⁸³ and becomes entitled to the satisfaction of his judgment out of such property in preference to other creditors whose liens are subsequently acquired,⁸⁴ even though other creditors have judgments which were obtained prior to the time when the complaining creditor obtained his;⁸⁵ and to the fastening or preservation of such a lien on injunction⁸⁶ or attachment or levy on the property⁸⁷ is ordinarily necessary, although under some statutes it is held that the filing of a bill to reach property of a debtor to pay a claim not reduced to judgment creates

no lien unless accompanied by the issuance of an injunction.⁸⁸ A creditors' bill to reach book accounts of a debtor is effective as a lien without notice to each individual debtor.⁸⁹

The general principle above stated is not to be extended, however, beyond the reason of its existence;⁹⁰ it applies only to a technical creditors' bill,⁹¹ and only where it is sought to reach equitable assets;⁹² and in some jurisdictions no lien attaches upon the mere filing of the bill,⁹³ but it attaches on the appointment of a receiver;⁹⁴ and the lien is contingent on the recovery of a valid

Priority over execution lien

The fiction of the relation back of the lien of an execution to its tests will not be extended in favor of a judgment creditor who has failed to take out execution as soon as he legally might, so as to give his lien priority over that of a subsequent judgment creditor, who, in the meantime, and before registration of the judgment of the other, or issuance of execution thereon, has fixed his lien on a chose in action by filing a creditors' bill under statute.—Stahlman v. Watson, Tenn.Ch.App., 39 S.W. 1055.

Priority over deed

Filing of bill by judgment creditor which described the property, alleged rendition of judgment, issuance of execution, nulla bona return, and existence of six hundred dollar note and deed of trust against property, foreclosure of which was threatened, fixed lien on property which was superior to interest created by deed filed two minutes after filing of bill.—Clevenger v. bankruptcy proceedings.—McCarthy v. Rogers, Mass., 3 N.E.2d 787.

(2) Where temporary order restraining debtor from transferring shares of stock was granted in creditor's suit to reach and apply shares to payment of debt, and debtor died before master's report was filed, creditor was not entitled to retain priority acquired over other creditors of debtor's insolvent estate, since priority would have been dissolved had claim been prosecuted by writ of summons and attachment or trustee writ at law.—McCarthy v. judgment, and is liable to be defeated by anything that defeats the judgment or the right of complainant to appropriate the fund.⁹⁵ Such lien is in all cases subject to prior legal or equitable liens or equities of others on the property.⁹⁶ The filing of a general creditors' bill after execution has been returned nulla bona does not entitle plaintiff to priority over previous executions where plaintiff's bill does not discover assets or aver facts which have not been sought to be taken advantage of by other parties previous to the filing of the bill.⁹⁷

In case several bills are filed against the same debtor, the respective complainants take priorities according to the seniority of their bills;⁹⁸ but where an attorney obtains a judgment in the capacity of executor, and is at the same time attorney for other parties in a suit against the same defendant, and a few days later obtains a judgment for them, the court, in applying the proceeds of an equity of redemption, will recognize no priority but will make distribution pari passu.⁹⁹ It has also been held that, where a later creditor files a bill and gets the first execution set aside, the next execution thereto, if levied before equity acquired jurisdiction, will be paid in its proper order.¹ However, a creditor is not debarred from participation in property because he has taken a preferential lien which is declared void.² Where a judgment creditor resorts to equity to reach a supposed equitable interest of the judgment debtor in the proceeds of the sale of real estate, and seeks to reach an interest not of record, he is subject to prior assignments of such interest, although not disclosed by record.³ So, where one of two joint purchasers pays the purchase price and takes title in his own name, he is entitled to be satisfied for the money advanced out of the land as against a creditor of the other purchaser, bringing a suit to reach the latter's equitable interest.⁴

In a suit to enforce a judgment against lands held by the debtor subject to a purchase-money lien, it is error to decree payment of the purchase money before the time fixed in the contract of purchase and sale;⁵ and since a judgment creditor of the grantor, in a trust deed securing a loan payable in installments, proceeding to enforce his judgment lien in a court of equity, can subject only the equity of redemption, the court has no power to change the terms and conditions of the deed of trust as to the maturity of the loan.⁶ As against a person holding equitable mortgages and assignments of funds due a contractor, made and recorded previous to the making of the subcontract, and who prior to the subcontractor's suit in equity had filed the contractor's written assignment of the balance due, the subcontractor has no superior right to subject such funds to the payment on his own contract,⁷ unless the equitable mortgagee has become estopped by his course of dealing from claiming as against the subcontractor.⁸

What law governs. The distribution of assets seized by a receiver in a creditors' suit is controlled by the court appointing the receiver, and is governed as to preferences between creditors by the law of the place where the seizure takes place, which will prevail over the law of the debtor's domicile.⁹

Requisites of bill to create lien. In order that a lien may be acquired by the filing of a creditors' bill, the bill must point out specific property of the debtor sought to be reached.¹⁰

b. Where Fund Is in Court or Is Trust Fund for All Creditors

As a general rule, where the fund is in court or is recognized in equity as a trust fund for all creditors, no one judgment creditor can obtain a preference by first filing a creditors' bill.

The rule that a creditor who first files a creditors' bill to reach property which cannot be seized on execution, acquires a prior lien, see supra § 84 a, has been held applicable where the fund uncovered is a fund which has been paid into court.¹¹ On the other hand it, has been held that where the fund is in court, no one judgment creditor can obtain any preference over others by first filing a bill.¹² Where an insolvent debtor's property has come into the custody of the court under a creditors' bill, to be distributed according to equitable principles, the rights of all parties are fixed as of that time;¹³ and where, after the appointment of a receiver on a creditors' bill, to conserve the property of an alleged solvent debtor, it develops that the debtor was insolvent at the time of the appointment, the rights of creditors are fixed as of that date, and a creditor having a claim in suit, but not adjudicated, cannot obtain a preference by proceeding to judgment and asserting a lien.¹⁴ It has been held, however, that the filing of a creditors' bill gives the creditor a lien on assets of the debtor in the hands of a receiver appointed in a prior suit brought by another creditor, superior to that of all judgment creditors except the one who brought the prior suit.¹⁵ Where the property or fund is recognized in equity as a trust fund for all creditors, no one creditor can, by filing a bill to obtain satisfaction of his debt out of it, obtain a preference of payment out of such fund over other creditors, but the fund is to be distributed pari passu among all creditors.¹⁶

c. Where Bill Is Brought in Behalf of All Creditors

Ordinarily, where a bill is brought by a creditor in behalf of all creditors who may come in, complainant obtains no preference in the distribution of the property or fund.

Where a bill is brought by a creditor on behalf of all other creditors who may come in, complainant obtains no preference over others who come in in due time, and the property will be administered so as to be distributed proportionately among all¹⁷ without, however, displacing the legal lien of any creditor.¹⁸ It has been held, however, that, where a bill is filed by a creditor for the benefit of all creditors who come in, those who come in only after decree do not stand on a parity with those who file the bill or come in before trial, but the latter have priority.¹⁹

The creditors' lien attaches on the service of process, or on the filing of the bill, or on the commencement of the suit and the issuance of process. An Intervener acquires a lien from the date of intervention.

The lien obtained on the equitable assets of a debtor by a creditors' suit attaches thereto from the time of service of process;²⁰ or, as stated in some of the cases, on the filing of the bill²¹ or the institution or commencement of suit²² and issuance of process.²³ The lien does not relate back to the date of the judgment sought to be enforced, so as to affect assignments between the date of the judgment and the time of the filing of the bill;²⁴ nor does it relate back to proceedings supplemental to execution, where no receiver was appointed therein.²⁵ Where an original creditors' bill is insufficient to fix a lien on the debtor's property, an amendment supplying the defect establishes the lien only from the date thereof, and does not relate back to the date of the original bill.²⁶ An intervener is entitled to a lien on the fund sought to be reached from the date of the intervention.²⁷

§ 86. — Property to Which Lien Attaches

The lien attaches only to the property owned by the debtor at the time the suit was commenced. It does not attach to property which is subject to execution, until the appointment of a receiver, or until an order restraining creditors from pursuing their remedy at law.

The lien of a creditor obtained by the filing of the bill attaches only to property of the debtor owned at the time of the commencement of the suit.²⁸ A supplemental bill is necessary to obtain a lien on after-acquired property, as stated supra § 67. The lien does not attach to property of the debtor which is subject to execution,²⁹ until the entry of an order appointing a receiver,³⁰ or until an order enjoining creditors from pursuing their remedy at law.³¹ However, the lien on the mortgagor's equity acquired by the filing of a bill by a creditor to foreclose the mortgage and reach the surplus, if any, expands with the enlargement of the mortgagor's interest by subsequent payments,

§ 87. — Duration of Lien

The lien acquired by bringing a creditors' suit ordinarily is not lost by the expiration of the lien of the judgment on which the suit is based, by laches in the prosecution of the suit, by a subsequent transfer by the debtor, nor by his death.

The lien acquired by the commencement of a creditors' suit is not lost by the expiration of the lien of the judgment on which the bill is based,³³ although some decisions hold that if complainant's judgment expires pending suit there is no lis pendens.³⁴ Neither is such lien lost by laches in the prosecution of the bill,³⁵ although where a creditors' bill which has been dismissed for want of prosecution is afterward reinstated, it cannot, by a nunc pro tunc order, be given effect during the period which has elapsed since the dismissal.³⁶ The lien is not affected by any subsequent transfer or assignment made by the debtor,³⁷ nor by his death,³⁸ even before the appointment of a receiver.³⁹ Whether the death of the debtor abates a creditors' suit is discussed in Abatement and Revival § 151. The effect of an adjudication of the debtor's bankruptcy on the lien acquired by the filing of a creditor's bill is discussed in Bankruptcy § 244 a; and the effect of the debtor's discharge in bankruptcy or liens acquired through legal proceedings generally is discussed in Bankruptcy § 582 b (6), and applied to a creditor's suit in note 45 of that section.

CRIMEN. The Latin noun "crimen, criminis" means crime; also an accusation or charge of crime.⁷¹

The Spanish word "crimen" also means, in Spanish law, crime, although a more common term is "delito." A distinction, however, is drawn between the two in this, that "delito" is general and includes all infractions of the penal laws, while "crimen" refers particularly to the most serious ones and those which are punished by afflictive or infamous penalties.⁷²
